DEAR FRIENDS,

As we look back on the impact our Childhoods & Livelihoods Program has had on children in Malawi over the past year, we are filled with gratitude to all of our amazing community leaders and partners, our dedicated team, and the amazing generosity of supporters like you.

The realities we face in Malawi are often difficult. As an organization, we have committed ourselves to working with the poorest of the poor. Often, families are struggling to provide their children even their most basic needs — food, healthcare, an education. They are faced with erratic environmental challenges, rely on small plots of land to feed their entire family, face devastating health threats, and lack access to safety nets that could prevent them from falling deeper into the cycle of poverty.

The situation is serious. But together, we are changing things.

With help from supporters like you, we are proud of incredible programmatic growth and impact in 2018. This year alone, our Childhoods & Livelihoods Program impacted the lives of over 100,000 children, and gave their communities the skills and support they need to create lasting, sustainable change.

This year, we continued our work with six Community Based Organization partners, helping them with mentorship, strengthening skills around childhood wellbeing, sustainable business, and financial literacy and inclusion. We expanded our household-level projects in Chiseka, welcoming an additional 200 households into the program. We celebrated harvests, empowered peer mentors to be leaders in their community, and established community savings groups that are helping caregivers save money for their children’s futures for the very first time. Most importantly, we helped more children get the care they need by strengthening services for children and caregivers’ capacity to provide nurturing, protective care.

None of our work would be possible without the amazing support of our partners and donors, and we are incredibly thankful for each and every dollar that helps us address the root causes of childhood vulnerability. Because in Malawi, yamba means begin, and this is what your support builds—new beginnings for Malawi’s children, and lasting change for their communities. For this and everything you do, we are so grateful.

ZIKOMO KWAMBIRI—a warm Malawian thank you,

One quarter of all Malawians live in extreme poverty, unable to meet their children’s most basic needs.

In rural Malawi, the challenges communities face are vast—from erratic rains and slim harvests to volatile economies and under-resourced social programs. Children are struggling to get the care and resources they need. The effects can last a lifetime.

YAMBA MALAWI’S CHILDHOODS & LIVELIHOODS PROGRAM IS CHANGING THIS.

Working in over 500 rural villages in Malawi, we understand that when you strengthen community safety nets, increase caregivers’ knowledge and resources, and help build more resilient economic environments, children benefit. In 2018 alone, Yamba Malawi strengthened social services at the community-level, doubled the number of vulnerable families in our household-level programs, and touched the lives of over 100,000 children.

WE ARE WORKING HARD TO ENSURE CHILDREN NOT ONLY SURVIVE, BUT THRIVE.
Our mission is to uplift vulnerable children by building businesses and by enabling investment in children’s care. Our vision is a world where strong, resilient communities build brighter futures for children.

Studies show that women’s empowerment and the wellbeing of children are inherently linked. That’s why our Childhoods & Livelihoods Program is committed to at least 50% representation of female caregivers, and in 2018, we surpassed that—56% of all caregivers and 52% of leadership positions were women.

The sustainability of both our household- and community-level programs is key to the success of our mission. To work towards this goal, this past Fall, we convened partner Community Based Organizations for an interactive workshop that focused on strategic planning, leadership skills, and diversifying income generating activities.

This year, our partners at Bright Vision Community donated 20,000 trees from their volunteer-run nursery to Tiyambenawo Community’s new orchard. Now, Tiyambenawo beekeepers are growing mango, papaya, and tangerines trees that will fortify the environment around their hives, all while providing healthy food options for community members in need.
Matilda lives with her two biological and two adopted children in a small mud hut with a thatch roof. Before this year, Matilda’s only income came from growing and selling tomatoes at market. Frequently, erratic rains devastated her crops. She was left with no way to earn an income, and struggled to even provide her children meager meals of maize flour.

Since enrolling in the Childhoods & Livelihoods Program, everything has changed for Matilda’s family. To ensure the children’s immediate needs were met, Yamba Malawi worked with Matilda to develop individualized plans that links her children to services like food, healthcare, and educational support. She not only increased her knowledge about best practices in childcare, but also learned new ways to generate income, how to manage and save profits, and most importantly, how to then use these profits to invest in her children’s futures.

In June, Matilda’s hard work paid off. After harvesting 535 lbs of soybeans and 465 lbs of groundnuts, Matilda sold her crops, opened a savings account, and is now providing her children with food, school supplies, soap, and uniforms. In recognition of her dedication, Matilda was elected to be a peer leader in the Program, and now serves as a mentor specializing in care for orphans and vulnerable children. “I learned so much,” Matilda describes, “and now I want my children to work hard, so they can lead their community like me!”
In the height of the HIV/AIDS crisis, the children living in rural Chiseka were faced with immense challenges. Maria, a local leader, describes, “Because of HIV/AIDS, there were many children whose parents passed away. They went to live with their aunts and uncles, until they passed away as well. The children were all alone. They became street children.” Children were left vulnerable, and the situation was urgent.

Maria decided to take action. “I didn’t want this happening in my community,” she explained. Joined by other female leaders, she started a Community Based Organization named Tiyambenawo—which means “Let us begin again together” in the local Chichewa language. The community’s response was immediate. “At the time of founding,” Maria describes, “We could not even keep track of how many orphans there were to help. They were coming from other villages, looking for food, looking for help. We didn’t have an office, so we met under a tree. We would do manual work, so we could raise money to feed the children.”

Now, Tiyambenawo Community Based Organization has joined Yamba Malawi’s Childhoods & Livelihoods Program, and is our first project that includes both community- and household-level interventions. With increased coaching around reducing childhood vulnerability and with income earned from their beekeeping project, Tiyambenawo’s strong female leaders are welcoming more children into early childhood programs, feeding programs, and after school care. With the passion and dedication of these fearless women, Tiyambenawo is now becoming a model for children’s care, environmentally-friendly development, and community empowerment.

THE ONGOING IMPACT OF FAMILY EMPOWERMENT

Harold is the eldest son of Lufina, a single-mother of five who is a beekeeper in the Chiseka Beekeeping Project. Harold’s father abandoned the family, leaving them without any support. Already struggling, the family faced numerous challenges—from insufficient food to a leaky roof that frequently caused the children to fall ill. Lufina worked hard to care for Harold and his siblings, but she lacked the resources she needed to lift her family out of poverty. As the eldest, Harold found himself taking on responsibilities like tending crops, caring for his siblings, and finding side jobs that would help them make ends meet.

Two years ago, Harold, his mother, and his siblings are enrolled in the Childhoods & Livelihoods Program—and the impact on their lives has grown ever since. In their first year, Harold’s family received the immediate support they needed to care for the household’s growing children, and Lufina began attending coaching sessions on childhood wellbeing, financial literacy, and technical beekeeping skills. She started her own honey business, and used her income that pays for school fees, food, and more.

Now in their second year of the Program, Harold and his family have truly been empowered to change their future. Harold graduated from secondary school and is now the first in his family to enroll in university, where he wants to become an accountant. His youngest brother, Yoweri, has received critical health services to repair his cleft palate, and Lufina has invested in home improvements that are now providing a safe, dry living environment for the entire family. No longer struggling to get by, Harold and his family can now set their sights on dreaming big dreams, and building brighter futures.

I was born in Malawi, the Warm Heart of Africa, so it brings such gratitude in my heart to see what this organization is doing on the ground. Direct impact to communities through sustainable businesses has been at the core of Yamba Malawi’s success, and their commitment to building a world where children get the care they need. As we say in Malawi, zikomo kwambiri—thank you very much!
