The thrills of becoming an “artist”

BY SARAH PRIDGEN

Elementary students across the county were last week introduced to the joys of writing and stagecraft during a visit from Wyoming author and theater stage manager, Nanci Turner Stevenson. Visiting each of the schools in turn, Stevenson conducted workshops aimed at inspiring young people to become artists in their own right.

The event was made possible by a Wyoming Humanities Council grant. The grant total was matched by proceeds from the school book fair.

Stevenson presented several workshops to the elementary kids, speaking about the idea of everyone having the chance to be an “artist”, whether it be with words, on the stage or elsewhere, and sharing her experiences and love of writing and the theater. She also signed books for readers of her work.

Now living in Wilson, WY, Stevenson is a middle-grade novelist who is now receiving national acclaim. She is also a Wyoming nominee for the Wyoming Indian Paintbrush award 2017-18 and represented the state on the “52 Great Reads” poster at the National Book Festival in Washington, D.C. this year.
