ZACH WILLIAMS

Zach Williams was born and raised in a small town outside Jonesboro, Arkansas, not unlike Andy Griffith's Mayberry or a scene from Goonies. Williams grew up in a home filled with loving parents who created a safe world for him to live in, surrounded by family members and neighbors who encouraged him. Yet the safety and security of that childhood seemed like a distant memory as Williams watched his life spiral out of control over a decade later.

"My childhood was amazing. I had awesome parents who, at an early age, instilled in me what it was to follow the Lord. My dad led worship in churches and my mom sang on praise teams. My childhood was almost storybook, or fairytale, you could say. They would always tell me I could do all things through Christ who strengthens me, and I can still remember to this day how supportive they were of everything I did," shares Williams.

With a desire to follow in his father's footsteps, a young Williams began pursuing sports with the hope he might become the kind of standout basketball player his father was years ago during his own high school career. Turns out, Williams carried a similar talent to his father and before he knew it, the basketball star was being watched and pursued by scouts from various colleges. While things continued to look up for the star athlete, Williams started playing Russian Roulette with his future by dabbling with alcohol and experimenting with drugs. It wasn't long before his poor choices cost him everything he had been working towards as he bid farewell to his division I scholarship.

In spite of the major setback, Williams decided to go to college anyway and continued to play basketball in a men's intramural league. Through a chance meeting, Williams was able to try out for a college team in Northwest Arkansas and clenched a full-ride scholarship. What seemed like a promising future took another nosedive as Williams began partying with the other athletes trying to outdo each other in various late-night shenanigans involving drugs and alcohol. Before he played his first game, Williams busted his ankle and sat out the entire first season.

And that's when music came into the picture.

Explains Williams, "Breaking my ankle ended up being a blessing and a curse: Sports were my life and I thought that's where I wanted to be, but music gave me an opportunity to do something different with my life. My roommate brought a guitar with him to college so I decided to teach myself how to play. My dad played music growing up but I was never interested in playing an instrument until that moment. Playing guitar felt so natural and I fell in love with it. I started writing songs and sports took a back seat. I knew what I wanted to do with my life."

After college, Williams moved back home and continued playing music for anybody and everybody who would lend an ear. He also continued to nurture his love affair with drugs and alcohol, finding the musician's lifestyle more conducive to bad habits.

"I knew I had a problem but I justified it. I was working for my dad's construction company at the time and I told myself that as long as I could go to work and get the job done, it didn't matter what I did at night," says Williams.

By his late twenties, Williams experienced both a marriage and a divorce. He also became the front man for a rock band, which quickly took off after the release of their first album. A booking agent was secured and the band began touring heavily in the States as well as Europe. Williams embraced the rock star lifestyle wholeheartedly, doing his best to bury his unhappiness with the growing success of his band.

"I finally had gotten to where I wanted to be and there were even more drugs and alcohol in the picture," shares Williams. "I would take anything and everything that you gave me, and was always the first guy ready to jump into the craziness and the last to go home. I went 100% at whatever I was doing and got really good at doing that with my bad habits, unfortunately."

As the notoriety of his band grew, so did the conviction that change needed to happen. Newly remarried with two stepchildren, Williams was encouraged by his bride to seek help. Wildly aware of his problem, he came face to face with the fact he needed help, but fear proved to be a serious hurdle that caused him to run in the opposite direction. Then, the encouragement to change his lifestyle was reinforced with a doctor's diagnosis.

"I had a scare in 2011 that caused me to take a break. I found out I had some early stages of cancer in my esophagus. The doctor told me, 'The way you're living - you've got to quit or it's going to kill you.' It scared me, but instead of quitting, I sunk deeper and deeper into depression, drugs and alcohol. I just continued to live that way for another year until something inside of me started to change."

The catalyst for that change started with an invitation. A band mate started attending church and began talking with Williams about it. Williams and his wife Crystal began attending the same church and found open arms and acceptance, something they were not expecting. They began to connect with the people in the congregation by plugging into as many activities and opportunities as possible. Williams' lifestyle started changing in a short amount of time, but it wasn't until he went back on the road that he made a complete 180.

"The guy driving our bus was scanning the radio and Big Daddy Weave's 'Redeemed' came on the radio," he shares. "I immediately knew the song because I worked construction with my dad for almost 15 years and every day on the job we listened to Christian radio. I'd also been listening to Petra, Keith Green and Russ Taff my whole life, so it was really a part of my DNA." That day when Williams heard the lyrics to "Redeemed," he said, "The Holy Spirit spoke to me in that moment, saying 'You need to quit doing what you're doing and turn your life around.' That was a turning point for me. I called my wife and told her I was coming home. I was quitting the band, we were going to cancel all of our shows, and that was it."

Williams' literal and figurative homecoming was full of confession, repentance and forgiveness with God as well as his family. They continued to immerse themselves in the life of their church and together Williams and his wife were baptized right before their fourth child was born.

Zach Williams eventually became the campus director and worship leader of Central Baptist's new campus in Jonesboro. Over time, doors opened for him to write songs with Jonathan Smith and Mia Fieldes. That led to the three of them to write the song "Chain Breaker," a tribute to the goodness of God in our lives. "Chain Breaker" has impacted and continues to impact millions of lives as it held the No. 1 spot on the Billboard Christian Airplay Radio chart for 15 weeks, setting a record for the longest running No. 1 for a debut single from a debut artist. The song is also RIAA certified GOLD.

Williams' album, Chain Breaker, has songs that reflect where Williams has come through his journey away from and back to faith. The inspiration for these songs comes directly from his life experiences and they are mirrors for what other people have experienced in their own lives as well as seen through countless comments, messages, and conversations Williams has been receiving since it's release. The songs serve as reminders to Williams of the truths of who Jesus is and these truths are what inspire him to keep moving forward. Chain Breaker won a GRAMMY® Award for Best Contemporary Christian Album in 2018 and so it's apparent that the truths that inspire Williams' music are also inspiring fans and peers alike

Williams' story and music continues to impact people all over the world. As of 2019, he was named Billboard's Top Christian Male Vocalist and New Artist of the Year in 2017, has won a K-LOVE Fan Award for Breakout Single of the year for "Chain Breaker" in 2017 and has won four GMA Dove Awards (Artist of the Year and Pop/Contemporary Recorded Song in 2018 and New Artist of the Year and Pop/Contemporary Recorded Song in 2017). His second single "Old Church Choir" held No. 1 on the Billboard Christian Airplay Radio chart for 20 weeks, making it the most successful song at radio in more than 10 years. The EP Williams released in 2018, Survivor: Live from Harding Prison, filmed and recorded during a live concert for the inmates of the Tennessee prison, has been nominated for a GRAMMY Award for Best Contemporary Christian Music Album for 2019.

"I did the whole rock star thing for so long and I felt like I was always faking it, and now I really just want to be real with people. Please don't wait another minute, make the decision today to follow Christ. I wished I would've done it 20 years ago. I wished I would've never gotten into drugs and alcohol and all that came with it. If you don't know what you're doing with your life then find a quiet place, fall down on your hands and knees, and ask God to come in and save your life. Surrender everything to Him. Jesus came and died on the cross so there would be a way for the chains of those struggles and addictions to be broken. If you have pain he's a pain taker, if you're lost He is the way maker, and if you've got chains, he's the chain breaker. The first step is allowing him to come in so he can set you free."
