- $1.9 million for dual-enrollment and fellowship programs to build diversity in the early childhood workforce

Project Summary
The City of Milwaukee has approved $7 million in funding from its American Rescue Plan Local Fiscal Recovery Funds to support and develop the city’s early childhood workforce. The Milwaukee Early Childhood Education Coalition, led by Milwaukee Succeeds, was instrumental in securing this investment from the City of Milwaukee.

More than $5 million of the funds are allocated to provide salary supplements for early childhood professionals. The intent of this investment in the workforce is to reduce staff turnover rates and promote more consistent relationships between infants, toddlers, and the people who care for them. The Wisconsin Early Childhood Association will administer the investment.

In addition to providing salary supplements to retain existing early childhood professionals, Milwaukee is investing in attracting new early childhood professionals to the field by creating new opportunities for youth, especially young men of color.

The Milwaukee Area Technical College will receive approximately $300,000 to support a dual-enrollment program, enabling students to attend college to study early childhood education while still enrolled and completing high school. In addition, the city is investing in two fellowship programs to attract more young men of color into the early childhood education workforce:

- The Literacy Lab’s Leading Men Fellowship will receive $1.06 million to empower and equip young men of color, ages 18–24, with opportunities to pursue careers as early childhood educators. Milwaukee’s investment will support 20 fellows over the course of three academic years.
- MKE Rising, sponsored by We Will All Rise, will receive $529,500 to prepare young men of color to participate in a 10-month early childhood residency to become early childhood scholars. Milwaukee’s investment in MKE Rising will fund cohorts of male educators of color serving in early childhood classrooms over the course of three academic years.

Unique Challenges

Milwaukee’s leaders have had to balance their allocations of American Rescue Plan funds across many equally important priorities while thinking ahead about the future need for more sustainable funding sources. City leaders were clear that they did not want to be the sole investors in early childhood. The Milwaukee Early Childhood Education Coalition’s advocacy efforts were crucial in demonstrating to city leadership why investing Milwaukee’s recovery dollars in early childhood education was important for Milwaukee and how it would help build on existing and forthcoming state investments in the sector.5

Ensuring Accountability

The proposal containing the city’s planned use of American Rescue Plan funds was approved by the City of Milwaukee Common Council and signed by the mayor. Individual grantees will be accountable for reporting their progress toward outputs and outcomes and Milwaukee Succeeds will support grantees as needed. Reports will be shared with the City of Milwaukee for programmatic accountability and for inclusion in a public dashboard.6

Additionally, Milwaukee Succeeds has contracted with the University of Wisconsin-Madison Wisconsin Evaluation Collaborative to conduct an external evaluation of the outputs and outcomes of the funded initiatives.7

Lessons Learned

The leadership of early educators who have been profoundly impacted by the pandemic has been essential in the development of and successful advocacy for this citywide investment in early education.8 With support from the Milwaukee Early Childhood Education Coalition, early educators called and emailed their council representatives to tell their stories, and the proposal’s legislative sponsor elevated these stories on the council floor when the proposal was up for debate. Milwaukee’s success demonstrates the importance of involving early childhood educators and workers in advocacy efforts.
