Butler Square
Dear Minnesotans,

Let’s set “Minnesota Nice” aside for a second and be blunt: you can’t beat summer in our state. And this year it’s going to feel particularly sweet to welcome warmer weather—we’re about two months removed from one of the coldest and snowiest winters we’ve ever experienced. It’s time to celebrate the Land of 10,000 Lakes. And one awesome new way to do that is Doors Open Minneapolis, a civic celebration honoring and learning our history from the most reliable sources out there—the buildings and people who have made it what it is today.

On May 18 and 19 we’ll be giving every visitor free, behind-the-scenes access to over 100 venues, including my office, across our great city.

There are a whole lot of options, and to help you navigate those decisions, venues have been sorted into “unique themes.” So, if you’re interested in the more historic buildings, we’ve got you covered. Maybe the arts are more your scene? That’s great! We have some recommended venues tailored to your interest.

The entire weekend is kid-friendly, and Doors Open makes for the perfect day date—how could you draw up a better Saturday or Sunday?

Our city is one of the most inclusive places in the nation, and I hope you’ll be able to experience that firsthand during Doors Open. Go to www.DoorsOpenMinneapolis.org to learn more about the venues, decide what you’d like to see, and build your plan for the weekend of May 18.

We look forward to seeing you then!

Jacob Frey
Mayor of Minneapolis
Dear Minnesotans,

The American Institute of Architects (AIA) Minneapolis is excited to be a partnering sponsor of Doors Open Minneapolis. It is a perfect way to share with the public our love of the built environment, and the role architecture and design have played throughout the years in shaping the spaces and places that help make Minneapolis the amazing community that it is.

As a large local chapter of the professional association for architects, we strive to advance a vital profession, vibrant communities and architecture that endures. Thank you for joining us as we embrace all three aspects of our mission this weekend. Our network of more than 1,600 members is excited to help you explore the diverse and rich story of Minneapolis this weekend. We encourage you to get out and explore the spaces and details that shape the world around you, including a number of award-winning design venues.

In addition to celebrating the buildings of today, join us at the Mill City Museum to learn from the past and prepare for the future of the built environment. Go to page seven to learn more about these activities and our collaborations with Juxtaposition Arts and Twin Cities Public Television.

Ask questions, take tours and engage with staff and volunteers to learn more about the connection between architecture, design and community. We can’t wait to go through these open doors with you and see what treasures and stories are behind them.

Family-Friendly Fun with Juxtaposition Arts

Saturday and Sunday, 10:00 am–2:30 pm

Explore what it means to develop healthy and self-sustaining communities in a hands-on activity for all ages! Juxtaposition Arts will help you design a future city where everyone thrives, with your favorite childhood memories as inspiration.

Consider the future of your neighborhood, the City of Minneapolis and all our communities through the 21st Century Development framework developed by AIA Minnesota, the Center for Sustainable Building Research and Colloqate, with support from the McKnight Foundation.

Activity ends at 2:30 pm on both Saturday and Sunday.
This activity is FREE, but admission is required to visit the rest of the museum.

Widen Your Perspective with tpt and AIA Minnesota

View highlights of Twin Cities PBS Minnesota Experience history films including “Jim Crow of the North,” “Cornerstones: A History of North Minneapolis,” and “The Past is Alive Within Us.” Discover the rich history of North Minneapolis, learn about the connection of this land to the Dakota people, consider the destructive history of racial covenants and redlining, and more.

10:30 am: The Impact of Place on Community
11:00 am & 2:00 pm: A Place to Call Home: Redlining, Public Housing and Community
11:30 am & 2:30 pm: “All of These Things Are Connected”: The Dakota Homeland and Early Minneapolis
12:00 pm & 3:00 pm: Invisible Racial Boundaries: The Lee Family and Lena Smith

12:30 pm & 3:30 pm: The Built Environment, Culture and Places of Worship
1:00 pm & 4:00 pm: Losses and Gains: People, Place and Minneapolis
1:30 pm & 4:30 pm: Place and History in South Minneapolis

Schedule is the same Saturday and Sunday. Showings are approximately 20 minutes each. Check DoorsOpenMinneapolis.org for the most up-to-date schedule!

Due to the nature of this event, you may have to stand in line before entering the theater.

What does a large media and technology corporation and Doors Open Minneapolis have in common? Connection.

When Doors Open Minneapolis approached Comcast to be the presenting sponsor, both parties knew it was a perfect fit. “Doors Open Minneapolis is all about connecting people to the city, to each other and letting them explore all the city’s wonders,” explained Jill Hornbacher, Comcast’s director of external communications. “Comcast is the same. We want to connect people, businesses and the community to what matters most to them.”

And this is more than just corporate lingo. Comcast lives out these values through their actions every day. As Minneapolis’s leading media and technology company, Comcast employs over 2,600 Twin Cities metro area residents who are actively contributing to the local economy. “We’re members of the local community, trying to deliver the best value, be good citizens and make a positive difference right here at home.”

Their Internet Essentials program helps bridge the digital divide by connecting low-income families with low-cost internet access, a free modem and in-home Wi-Fi, digital literacy training, and a reduced price on a laptop. It’s the nation’s largest low-cost broadband adoption program and is open to families eligible for free or reduced school lunch through the National School Lunch Program, people receiving HUD housing assistance, and low-income veterans. To learn more visit InternetEssentials.com.

“We know how important technology is, and we want to make sure we’re connecting people to it. We want to make sure Minneapolis is successful into the future, especially the kids,” Hornbacher says. “That’s the future of Minneapolis and our future workforce.”

Each spring, Comcast celebrates its commitment to volunteerism through Comcast Cares Day when thousands of volunteers work at a variety of community outreach projects throughout the Twin Cities. Notable for 2019 was a project in North Minneapolis where volunteers assembled resource kits for nonprofit organizations and hosted a workforce development summit for 200 high school youth, providing workshops on digital presence, workplace etiquette and more.

Comcast does all this while continuing to innovate and provide the best value to its customers through its Xfinity and Comcast Business products and services. “We are investing to make sure we are there for you and all your connection needs,” Hornbacher points out.

“We know it’s a privilege to do business in Minneapolis and in the communities at large,” she continues. “We’re in people’s homes and in businesses of all sizes. Every day, we strive to be good neighbors and really make that positive difference to ensure the community thrives. If we do that, then we’re all collectively successful.”

As you explore the city’s open doors today, be sure to stop and connect at the number of free mobile charging stations provided by Comcast—see page 7 for locations!
