Overview
The University Chancellors Council and the Australian Institute of Company Directors have worked together to create a bespoke training course, Foundations of University Governance, that provides a full and detailed understanding of governance in the university sector. The first two courses ran successfully in early 2018 and received very positive feedback. The content for ongoing courses has been further refined to make them specifically tailored to the current challenges facing the governing and administrative bodies of universities.

This is an important program in ensuring university leaders and administrators can successfully oversee their institutions and guide them to success. It incorporates real world cases studies of university governance so participants can prepare for various scenarios they might confront. It is suitable for all members of boards, councils and senates, whether appointed or elected.

University secretaries and other senior staff with governance responsibilities have also found the course useful and relevant to performing their roles at a high level. A chancellor or deputy chancellor participates throughout each course.

How will you benefit?
We have worked hard to ensure that over the three days the participants will be actively involved in University specific content, case studies, discussions and simulations across:

- The role of the Senate and council members
- Introduction to Senate Meetings and governance
- Introduction to Financial Statements for Universities
- Assessing Financial Performance
- Introduction to the Strategic Role of the Senate and Council Members
The management of risk in universities

The relationship between the Vice-Chancellor and the Council/Senate.

A Chancellor or Deputy Chancellor will participate throughout the course.

On the evening of Day two we will also be holding a dinner with a panel of Chancellors who will discuss challenges faced within the area of University governance.

To make this good value for our members the UCC has funded the full cost of customisation of the program as well as the venue and catering costs to hold the program at the central AICD training facilities.

The AICD facilitators will ensure relevancy for all participants who attend, no matter from which University they come.

Places are strictly limited to 25 per program. Our goal will be to ensure that representatives attend from a wide range of Universities.
