Letter from the Chair, Jon Miller

The stakes have never been higher for LGBT+ people around the world: our rights are at the heart of a global struggle between repressive conservatism and the values of openness and inclusion. The voice of the business community has never been more important.

Culturally conservative politicians have gained power and influence in many countries. They have little respect for the value of open, inclusive and diverse societies, and they’ve made life for LGBT+ people harder. It’s clear that they have no hesitation in using the lives of LGBT+ people as a political tool.

The human rights of LGBT+ people have become a geopolitical ‘wedge issue’: there’s growing evidence that Russia is funding anti-LGBT+ groups across Eastern Europe, with the clear aim of creating division and undermining democratic values. And it’s working: Hungary’s position in the EU, for example, looks increasingly precarious.

Trans people, in particular, are suffering the politicization of their basic human rights. Even in countries that have made real advances on many LGBT+ issues, the public discourse is gripped by a moral panic, fueled by the divisive scaremongering of conservative politicians and media. This toxic atmosphere is having a devastating impact on the lives of trans people.

Scaremongering is also driving ‘don’t say gay’ legislation – even in the U.S., supposedly the beacon of democratic values. Casting the inclusion of LGBT+ people in opposition to the safety of children is a dangerous piece of doublethink, and yet this wave of laws – which has its provenance in Putin’s Russia – looks likely to spread across states and countries.

All of this runs counter to the principles that underpin the success of business, and the advancement of economies. More than ever, business leaders need to speak up in defense of these principles – but doing so is a potential minefield. That’s why Open For Business exists: to strengthen a collective business voice in countries where LGBT+ rights are under threat.

Our 2021-22 Impact Report sets out how Open For Business has been doing just this – in Africa, across Central and Eastern Europe, in the Caribbean, and now in South East Asia – mobilizing business action, driven by the evidence base, backed by solid data.

We dedicate this report this year to Ukraine, whose people have felt the terrible violence of strongman politics more than any. We send our solidarity and love to our collaborators who remain there and those forced to begin new lives abroad.

Highlights of 2021-22
Central and Eastern Europe (CEE)

Mobilizing the voice of business in defense of LGBT+

Launched in spring 2021, Open For Business’s Central and Eastern Europe program has had a successful year of activity focusing on four key countries – Hungary, Poland, Romania and Ukraine – with research also being undertaken in Uzbekistan. Similar to our other regional programs, the key work components are research into the business and economic case for LGBT+ inclusion and an outreach/coalition building effort to engage local and regional businesses.

The cost of LGBT+ Discrimination

From 0.43% to 1.75% annual GDP

Release of the Open For Business CEE flagship report

In April 2021, Open For Business CEE released its report, “The Economic Case For LGBT+ Inclusion in Central & Eastern Europe: Hungary, Poland, Romania, and Ukraine” with a virtual European Union webinar at which EU Commissioner for Equality Helena Dalli was keynote speaker. This was followed by separate in-language webinars in each of the focus countries: in all, nearly 300 business, CSO and other leaders attended these events.

The report found that LGBT+ discrimination cost these four economies between 0.23% to 1.75% of their annual GDP; it also showed that there is a direct correlation between economic growth and greater LGBT+ inclusiveness. As Regional Program Lead and current Open For Business Interim Executive Director George Perlov said, “Put simply, countries that are more accepting of LGBT+ people are more prosperous.”

Tackling discrimination against LGBTIQ people is not only important in the pursuit of equality and fairness but it will also give companies that embrace it competitive edge in attracting and retaining talent.

Helena Dalli
European Commissioner for Equality, speaking at the report launch
These findings made headlines and news broadcasts at the international, regional, and local level, reframing LGBT+ rights as an economic issue. Social media spread the word further, and the multi-language reports were viewed and downloaded by thousands of business, government, and civil society leaders in the region. Within days of the launch, research findings were being widely discussed: in Poland, for example, the report was cited by the US Embassy’s Chargé d’Affaires in a major policy speech to his Polish government counterparts.

The research enabled a fast response in Hungary when the government rushed through a draconian law banning LGBT+ related content, on the pretext of protecting children.

Working with our local partners We Are Open, we were able to coordinate a clear business briefing setting out business opposition to the law, based on the economic case. This was picked up by national and international media (“Businesses slam proposed ban on LGBT+ content in Hungary”, ran the Reuters headline\(^1\)). The government felt the need to issue a statement in response, but the measure was nonetheless passed into law. The battle was lost, but a clear signal had been sent that businesses would take a firm stand against discrimination.

CEE Local Influencer Program

The CEE program continues to be guided by our local Program Advisory Board, comprised of representatives of LGBT+ NGOs and local corporations which meet regularly to discuss progress against the regional program plan.

In fall 2021 Open For Business hired local consultants in Hungary and Poland to lead the Local Influencer Program and capitalize on the strong engagement the report has received. With support from the UK Embassy in Poland, Open For Business launched a series of panel discussions in Poland beginning with the Economic Forum in Karpacz (“the Davos of Poland”) in September. A second event was held in November in collaboration with the Warsaw “Rainbow Network” of LGBT+ Employee Resource Groups.

The Economic Case for LGBT+ Rights in Uzbekistan

In November, with the kind support of Open Society Foundations, Open For Business launched a report on the Economic Case for LGBT+ Inclusion in Uzbekistan with a view to inspiring business, political and government leaders to reduce discriminatory policies and embrace greater inclusion. The report found that despite Uzbekistan’s many recent positive policy changes that have attracted greater business interest, its dismal record on LGBT+ rights is keeping the country from attracting more talent, innovation and overall economic growth especially compared to other post-Soviet countries.

A mix of approximately 75 mostly business, NGO and diplomatic representatives attended our online launch event. In addition to a presentation of the key report findings, the event featured speakers from Human Rights Watch, ILGA-Europe, and Proud at Work, a Munich-based NGO that works with many German companies doing business in Uzbekistan. As attending such an event for members of the Uzbek LGBT+ community would be a security risk for them, the launch was interspersed with clips from anonymized interviews.

Since the launch, the report has been downloaded from the Open For Business website just under 600 times, and in December 2021 we presented key findings of the work to the annual meeting of the Partnership for Global LGBTI Equality (PGLE), a World Economic Forum partnership organization.

Open For Business is working to deepen its local engagement in the CEE region and plans to continue to convene business leaders, economists, activists and government officials/elected leaders who understand that there are significant costs to societies that discriminate against LGBT+ people and economic advantages for greater LGBT+ inclusion.

In 2022, we wish to gather the Polish business community around the economic case for inclusion. We hope to raise awareness about the consequences our country and region suffer as a result of discrimination, while highlighting successes of the Polish LGBT+ community during a series of events bringing together our country’s businesses, NGOs and policymakers.

2022 is a year of renewed action for the business community in Hungary. With disappointing election results, the role of companies in creating a positive and inclusive environment that is conducive to doing business is more important than ever.

The Caribbean

Ground-breaking research featuring the largest LGBT+ data sample in the Caribbean

Our report, The Economic Case for LGBT+ Inclusion in the Caribbean, was launched in June 2021 with support from Virgin Atlantic. The report highlights our survey research, interviews and data analysis, focused on 12 English-speaking Caribbean countries: Antigua & Barbuda, The Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Dominica, Grenada, Guyana, Jamaica, Saint Lucia, St. Kitts and Nevis, St. Vincent and the Grenadines, and Trinidad and Tobago.

The report featured data from the largest ever survey of Caribbean LGBT+ people (those currently living in the region plus diaspora), as well as prospective Caribbean tourists, and interviews with business leaders and employees of Caribbean-based companies.

The report found that LGBT+ discrimination costs up to $4.2 billion a year – as much as 5.7% of annual GDP – in these countries. Certain sectors are particularly hard-hit: for example, LGBT+ discrimination significantly impacts the tourism industry in the Caribbean with LGBT+ tourists and allies staying away as a result of discriminatory policies. It also leads to a brain drain of talent from the region, with people leaving for more open societies and never returning. Conversely, countries opting for more inclusive policies see their economies grow as a direct result of being more welcoming.

Sir Richard Branson of Virgin speaking out on the launch of our Caribbean report

Representatives from CAISO, British High Commission and Open For Business at the Caribbean Report Launch
A high-profile report launch event included keynotes from Her Excellency Harriet Cross, British High Commissioner for Trinidad and Tobago and Sir Richard Branson, Founder of Virgin Group, along with a distinguished local and international discussion panel. The event attracted about 100 viewers including businesses, activists, funders and government officials locally as well as from the US and Europe. In terms of global media penetration, the launch was featured in Thomson Reuters and Al Jazeera, with a social media campaign running throughout the summer continuing to build interest. The launch also triggered requests for presentations from influential multilateral stakeholders including the Organization of American States, the International Development Bank, and Parliamentarians for Global Action.

In 2022, we hope to facilitate and unlock the potential of a network of business leaders across the Caribbean who truly understand the impact they can have on shaping a more LGBT+ inclusive Caribbean.

Study: Anti-LGBTQ laws cost Caribbean up to $4.2BN a year

A new report by Open for Business found that Caribbean nations are losing billions of dollars in missing tourism, productivity and competitiveness each year to laws that discriminate against LGBTQ+ people.

Media pick-up of the report launch included coverage on Al-Jazeera and local outlets.
East Africa

Strengthening engagement across the private sector

Our program in Kenya continues to attract more private sector stakeholders, bringing the message of LGBT+ inclusion as an imperative to greater economic success for businesses, civil society organizations and policymakers. Our Program Advisory Board continues to provide us with guidance and counsel on the business, societal and legislative issues facing the country.

Businesses commit to Inclusion

Open For Business developed the “Nairobi Declaration” for businesses to show their commitment to greater diversity and inclusion. To date, over thirty businesses large and small, operational in Kenya, and from a host of sectors and industries have become signatories to the Declaration.

The Declaration follows the government of Kenya’s commitment to ensuring workplaces are free of discrimination based on sexual orientation or gender identity. At a pre-launch online event in January 2022, a Kenyan corporate lawyer briefed businesses on what companies can legally do to support greater LGBT+ inclusion, which was followed by a business roundtable discussion. This work is necessary to clarify the legal misunderstanding that some companies still have over advancing LGBT+ rights in Kenya. A formal launch of the Declaration will follow later in the year.

The pre-launch event for OPEN FOR BUSINESS’s Nairobi Declaration featured a presentation by Bowmans and a panel discussion with representatives from Globeleq, Levanter, Oxygene and Microsoft.
United Nations Development Program (UNDP) Feasibility Study

Following the success of our landmark Kenya report on the economic case for LGBT+ inclusion, UNDP commissioned Open For Business to conduct feasibility research to create similar reports in four additional sub-Saharan African countries – Ghana, Namibia, Nigeria, and Zimbabwe. As we have learned in Kenya, having a research-based economic report is the critical first step to developing a comprehensive local engagement program. This study is the first step in this direction.

Spreading the Message

We continue to hold unilateral and multilateral meetings with businesses, CSOs, the diplomatic missions and others in Kenya and across Africa on the economic case for LGBT+ inclusion. In Kenya we have held training sessions for both local and global companies including Diageo, Globeleq and groups of SMEs from different sectors.

We have deepened ties in the government sector with the British High Commission and with the Kenya National Commission on Human Rights. We have also expanded relationships with the African Diversity and Inclusion Center and continue to speak at various national and global institutions including universities, UNDP and private sector players, among others.

Media Appearances

We have secured appearances on leading Kenyan radio shows including an interview on Spice FM and on the influential Jeff Koinange show from Citizen Radio. These opportunities allow Open For Business to have frank discussions about LGBT+ inclusion that reach mass audiences across the country.
Global Programs

Open For Business named as a World Economic Forum “Lighthouse Project”

In September 2021, Open For Business was named by the World Economic Forum (WEF) as a “lighthouse example,” illustrating how business is partnering with communities and civil society to accelerate action on equity and social justice. The report recognized organizations “taking principled action supporting stakeholder capitalism and inclusion of workers, communities and civil society” and making the case that “it is vital for companies to create a more inclusive and sustainable future following global crises and rampant social injustices.” Open For Business was singled out for its work in influencing public policy and helping companies speak out as corporate citizens.

Pride 2021: Celebrating with Phyll Opoku-Gyimah of Kaleidoscope Trust and UK Black Pride

As part of a celebration of LGBT+ Pride Month in June 2021, Open For Business’ Board Chair Jon Miller hosted an online event featuring Phyll Opoku-Gyimah, widely known as Lady Phyll, human rights activist, founder of UK Black Pride and Executive Director of Kaleidoscope Trust, a UK-based charity working to uphold the human rights of LGBT+ people across the Commonwealth. Jon began by asking Lady Phyll whether there was still, in this day and age, a need for Pride events? Lady Phyll was in no doubt. “We are not living in some ideal world, where we all have the rights that we deserve,” she said. “So Pride is much more than just a celebration – it is a reaffirmation of fundamental human rights.”

When it comes to LGBT+ rights worldwide, Lady Phyll believes that there has been both progress and regression in recent years. She points to successes in countries such as Trinidad and Tobago, Botswana, Gabon, and India. “But [while] we’ve got rights in certain places - equal marriage, for example - that’s not the be-all and end-all. We’re also seeing 44 Ugandans arrested, or the 22 LGBT+ people in Ghana being detained unlawfully, injustices in Nigeria [and] in Hungary…”

In such a changing global context, the work of organizations fighting for LGBT+ rights worldwide – Open For Business, the Kaleidoscope Trust, and others – is more important than ever. And businesses, she says, which set working and even cultural standards, are crucial to protect progress.

Coalition Partner Connect Sessions: Strengthening the Coalition Through Learning and Best Practice Sharing

Sensing the need for more engagement between our Coalition Partners during the ongoing pandemic, in 2021 Open For Business launched the Coalition Partner Connect Program. These monthly Zoom meetings allow representatives from Coalition Partner companies to connect and have informal conversations with their peers on a host of issues and topics.

Mostly Coalition-led with occasional guest speakers, programs in 2021 focused on LGBT+ inclusion in advertising, LGBT+ self-identification within companies, and trans issues. Partners enjoyed the environment and opportunity to speak freely and openly on best practices and also where their programs or activities may have fallen short. Presenters in 2021 included representatives from Coalition Partners Deloitte, IBM, L’Oréal, Mastercard and Unilever.

Human Rights Day 2021: in conversation with U.S. Special Envoy Jessica Stern

In December 2021 Open For Business hosted an online Human Rights Day celebration. Board Chair Jon Miller spoke with Jessica Stern, the U.S. Special Envoy to Advance the Human Rights of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, Queer and Intersex Persons, to discuss the current state of global LGBT+ rights and how business can best support and protect LGBT+ communities worldwide.

Special Envoy Stern, who most recently served as Executive Director of OutRight Action International, sees a growing backlash against LGBT+ inclusion around the world even as recognition of the human rights of LGBT+ people has in many places accelerated. She describes a direct link between LGBT+ rights and stable democracies. “The fault line… is not gay versus straight, or transgender versus cisgender,” she said. Rather, “it’s about inclusive, stable democracies that address the needs of all people.” Such democracies create the environments for business to flourish; business, therefore, has a huge interest in promoting and protecting LGBT+ rights.

Stern proposed three steps for businesses to take that will help protect LGBT+ people both in and outside of their business. First, they can make it clear that their decision to invest in a country will be based on countries’ respect for the rule of law and protection of human rights. Second, businesses can emphasize that equality for LGBT+ persons means promoting equality not only for LGBT+ people, but for everyone. Third, businesses can create work environments that welcome and protect LGBT+ people.

“This is where organizations such as Open For Business, come in,” Stern said. “Seeing [companies] dedicating to taking action on LGBT+ rights through Open For Business is heartening, and the organization is a great place for businesses looking for ways to get involved to start.”
Civil Society Business Toolkit: new guide for how civil society can better engage with businesses

Open For Business was thrilled to partner with Workplace Pride and The Other Foundation on a new Civil Society Business Toolkit, a primer for LGBT+ organizations on how to better engage with the private sector. Open For Business conducted the underlying research that informed the primer, which included one-on-one in-depth interviews and a survey with LGBT+ organizations around the world. The research addressed the topics of CSO mindset towards the business community, how CSOs can make a business case, developing and sustaining partnerships and how to best communicate, among others. This data was then used to inform the specific recommendations in the toolkit. It was launched at World Pride in Copenhagen in July, 2021.
Looking forward to 2022

2022 will see the launch of the third edition of the Open For Business Cities Ratings. The ratings provide a unique view of which cities are making progress and which are backsliding. And they show clearly that LGBT+ inclusion makes cities more competitive, more entrepreneurial, and better places to do business.

The impact that Open For Business makes is possible only because of the strength of the coalition. When such high profile, highly respected businesses join together to take action for LGBT+ equality, a powerful force for change is created.

And the stronger our coalition, the more impact we can make. This doesn’t just mean making the coalition bigger but deepening the work we can do together. That’s why we’re welcoming a new senior member of staff, Andy Melia, to the newly created position of Strategic Partnerships Director. Andy will work closely with our partners to unlock the full potential of the coalition.

Over the next year, we will be pushing forward with our ongoing work in East Africa, Central & Eastern Europe, and the Caribbean. Already, we have groundbreaking data on the economic case in these regions, and we’ll be working with our teams on the ground to turn this into advocacy that makes an impact.

Open For Business is also rolling out a programme across Southeast Asia over the coming year. Starting with commissioning fresh research on the economic case for LGBT+ inclusion in Thailand, we will expand the programme into Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Vietnam.

Over the past year, we’ve enjoyed the support and partnership of many organisations – from activist groups on the frontlines, to organisations like the World Economic Forum, the UK’s Foreign, Commonwealth and Development Office (FCDO), and the European Commission. We are excited to begin a new partnership with the International Chambers of Commerce (ICC). In the year ahead, we look forward to deepening these relationships, and exploring new collaborations that can help us make a bigger impact.

A Tribute to Jonathan Cooper

Jonathan Cooper died suddenly in September 2021 whilst walking in Scotland with his husband Kevin. Jonathan was an inspiration and a life force for advancing LGBT+ rights globally.

Open For Business benefited greatly from Jonathan’s guidance and enthusiasm over the years, even before we incorporated as a charity. He saw the economic case for LGBT+ inclusion as an important complement to the use of strategic litigation. Like many other organizations, we are stronger because of Jonathan’s brilliant legal mind, his creativity, and his boundless spirit of activism.

Jonathan will always be part of the Open For Business family and the entire LGBT+ movement will miss him deeply.
The Economic & Business Case: 27 Propositions

All the work of Open For Business is underpinned by a set of 27 propositions across three categories of performance that synthesize a broad and fragmented evidence base into a clear and comprehensive economic case for LGBT+ inclusion.

These propositions can be used to set out the evidence that will empower those making the case against LGBT+ discrimination, wherever it exists in the world.

We will continue to unpack these propositions in our future work and look forward to working in partnership with others on the journey towards global LGBT+ inclusion.
