HOME IS TO FAMILY AS HABITAT IS TO COMMUNITY

What is the Summit Land Conservancy's role during hard times? The places we've protected together provide relief, solace, and strength to the people in our community, and our work to address the larger, looming issue of climate change is as critical as ever. But right now, people need help.

As the director of a community-based organization, I feel compelled to listen to the needs of the people around me. I hear that they need work; they need food; they need hope. Our conservation work continues, as you'll read in these pages, but we are also focusing staff time towards actions that help our neighbors in need.

This is not about providing our usual services via the internet. This is about figuring out how our mission to save land can also support people in crisis.

Our conservation team is writing grants for agricultural producers.

We have hired six local, first-generation Latinx students who have lost jobs due to the pandemic. They are expanding our outreach programs, helping with land stewardship, and studying how regenerative agriculture impacts soil carbon. In the process, these bright kids are changing us as they demonstrate resilience and personify the imperative to undo structural racism.

The Summit Land Conservancy aspires to save human habitat forever. But we exist only in context with our community. We are committed to ensuring that open spaces are safe and accessible for people of color. We will continue to save land AND support our community.

Cheryl Fox
Executive Director

We've all spent a lot more time than usual in our houses over the past few months. But a home is more than walls and roofs: Home embraces family, and home expands through the trails that take us into the open spaces. Home becomes places like Round Valley and our family expands to include the wandering elk, the moose and her babies, and the gargling sandhill cranes.

The Summit Land Conservancy needs a new home. The space we've been sharing with Mountain Trails Foundation will be demolished in a few months. For the past year, we've been working together with Mountain Trails to find a place we could share as headquarters for both organizations. We're in the process of converting a warehouse in the Silver Summit neighborhood. Sharing expenses and combining resources allows us to devote more dollars to open space and trails.

If you enjoy trails and open space, please consider supporting the Home Campaign, because home is where our habitat begins.

MARCHANT MEADOWS

This spring, the Summit Land Conservancy learned that we were successful in applying for a Regional Conservation Partnership Program grant, awarded by the federal government.

Over the next five years, this grant will allow the Conservancy to preserve and enhance lands along the Weber and Provo Rivers.

This funding is a game changer and it comes at a critical time. In the last few months, despite the pandemic, our communities along the Wasatch Back have seen development activity sky rocket as the open spaces of Utah draw people from more crowded urban areas. We are seeing an avalanche of real estate transactions, increased land prices, and huge proposals for new development. The open spaces that we love and that have nurtured us through the pandemic are at risk.

Right now, the Summit Land Conservancy is working with the Regional Conservation Partnership Program to save the Marchant Meadows. We have these 106 acres along Wooden Shoe Lane in Peoa under contract. The property contains two braids of the Weber River and, if we are successful, will be a permanently protected natural open space area with non-motorized trails.

CAN YOU HELP?

We need $450,000 in community support by October 15, 2020 to save this land and create this public open space. If you can help, please visit www.wesaveland.org/donate/MarchantMeadows

OTHER CURRENT CONSERVATION PROJECTS:

- A family farm along the Weber in Coalville
- An Aldo Leopold Award-winning ranch in Chalk Creek
- The former monastery in Huntsville
- The views, wildlife habitat, and local agriculture on the old “Mountain Spaa” (yes, aa) property in Midway

CONSERVATION

We met Richard and Kent Fawcett in the sunshine on their front porch in Henefer. They owned a farm along the Weber River and the idea that it might become a crop of houses troubled them. At that time in 2007, the Summit Land Conservancy had never purchased a conservation easement. We'd protected land through easement grants, but we'd never tried to raise the money to buy the development rights off a property. We had two part-time staff and 80 square feet of office space.

Richard told pioneer stories about grizzly bears that used to lurk in the willows, and how the river meandered before Interstate 84 came along. In July of 2009 we completed that easement purchase and together with the family and partners, including Summit County, the Utah Division of Water Quality, and the George S. and Dolores Doré Eccles Foundation, we saved 44 acres.

44 acres is mighty small compared to the over-all 1,882 square miles (1.2 million acres) that make up Summit County. But first steps aren't about distance. They're about courage.

Weber Henefer Easements

Over the next few years, despite the Great Recession, we found new funding sources to help the Fawcett's neighbor, Bob Richins, protect 50 acres. Last year, with expanding support, we saved two more farms in Henefer. Today that section of the Weber looks the same as it did in 2007. But on a map, you'll see a quilt built through a series of steps-- a swath of 226 acres that have been permanently protected.

In total, the Conservancy completed 7 separate conservation transactions in 2019, saving the Osguthorpe Farm on Old Ranch Road, a heritage ranch in Chalk Creek, three farms along the Weber River, and easement projects in Oakley and the Enclave and Sun Canyon.

Land conservation is about values that are hard to enumerate, and each parcel of land we save is unique. Each place harbors memories, sustains a family and nourishes wildlife. When we save land, we usually don't know what will happen on the adjacent property. When the stars align and conservation can happen, we know that it's act of amazing generosity and grace.

There's faith too. That a neighbor will like the idea, that a new partner will step forward, and that the first step will lead to more.

YOUR SUPPORT MAKES ALL OF THESE STEPS POSSIBLE.

TOGETHER OUTDOORS

The Conservancy seeks opportunities to partner with members of our community. We believe that connecting people to nature through our programs is an integral part of inspiring new conservationists and stewards of the land. From Park City's littlest land conservators, to beer lovers, to the outdoor enthusiast looking for adventure, there's a program for everyone!

- Volunteer for the Summit Land Conservancy (you and/or your kids)

KIDS OUTDOORS

The average North American child spends 7-10 hours each day looking at a screen and just 7 minutes a day outside. Unstructured free play in nature helps develop a child's imagination, cognitive, reasoning and observation skills, motor skills, physical fitness, and social skills. It is also the most common influence on the development of an adult conservation ethic! We are happy to partner with the Park City School District afterschool programs to restore nature play in Park City's open spaces to local youth.

THE ART OF NATURE BATHING

The studies keep confirming: Nature is good for you. As many of us spend time indoors tethered to our devices, we begin to lose touch with our connection to the natural world. Open spaces ground us, balance us, connect us and cure us-- and as the current state of the world causes more stress and anxiety in our every day lives, we need this more than ever. The Summit Land Conservancy is thrilled to partner with Communities That Care to offer a new program that focuses on the art and healing powers of Nature Bathing. Developed in Japan, Shinrin-yoku, which translates to "forest bathing" or "absorbing the forest atmosphere" encourages people to simply spend time outdoors immersed in the smells, textures, tastes, sounds, and sights of nature. It teaches the pleasures of presence in the wild and helps create a more defined sense of purpose and connection to this beautiful place we call home. Start your week off right (every other Monday) with a two-hour wellness walk in nature...We think you'll really thank us! Locations and times will be announced on our website and at www.facebook.com/wesaveland.

90 OPEN SPACE ENTHUSIASTS VENTURED INTO THE DARK

172 HIKERS SEARCHED FOR WILD GROWING HOPS

DRINK BEER; SAVE LAND!

Join us every other Wednesday evening as we head to the hills to seek out the wild growing hops on lands protected by the Conservancy. Our Hops Hunters hikes run from June through August, when we partner with our friends at Wasatch Brew Pub to harvest the wild hops and help craft Utah's only wild hop ale—Clothing Hoptional. Can't make the hikes? Celebrate the two things that have helped us survive quarantine, open space and beer, by volunteering for our hops harvest or purchasing Clothing Hoptional this fall!

Space is limited to 20 hikers, so be sure head to our website for hike dates and sign ups!

CLOTHING HOPTIONAL

The only beer that saves land with every pour! 43 harvesters picked over 100LB of hops. Hops from SEVEN different properties. 500 gallons brewed of our open space.

A PLACE TO VISIT.
IT IS HOME.”

EAT CHOCOLATE AND SAVE LAND!

We are excited to announce a new collaborative bar with Park City's own Ritual Chocolate! Inspired by the mountains and local flavors surrounding us, this mild pine nut chocolate bar boasts soft, smooth and deliciously nutty flavors where you can actually taste the open space. A perfect trail delight as you're enjoying a scenic view, or a delectable gift for that person with a sweet tooth in your life-- next time you're at Ritual Chocolate Cafe pick up a bar (or a few) because 25% of the proceeds go directly toward saving the lands you love!
