Educating girls today is one of the most effective investments a country can make to lift families out of poverty and build a better future. When educated girls grow up and become mothers, they tend to have healthier and better-educated children. Educating girls reduces weakness and can impact an important sense of normality and provide lifesaving information and services that will benefit the society. Increasing access to education for all may reduce feelings of injustice that have fueled conflicts. Importantly, ensuring future generations are well educated is vital for overcoming conflict, aiding recovery, and ensuring future development and security.

Hajara Mustapha is a Malala Advocate with Girls Campaign for Quality Education, a project under Centre for Girls Education (CGE) Zaria with support from Malala Fund