Immigration Leaders To Discuss Power of Art and Storytelling In Changing Immigration Debate at Launch of UndocuAmerica Podcast

The event will feature snippets and stories behind new groundbreaking podcast

(Los Angeles, CA) — On Thursday, October 24th, youth leaders will share their personal narratives of living undocumented in America at the launch of Motus Theatre's new podcast series UndocuAmerica.

The evening will celebrate the launch of the UndocuAmerica podcast through storytelling, music and conversation that will honor the lives and stories of the millions of undocumented Americans who work, raise families, go to school, and have become pillars of their communities.

UndocuAmerica invites audiences to experience powerful and moving stories from undocumented Americans caught in the crosshairs of U.S immigration policy read by prominent cultural and political leaders such as Jorge Ramos, John Lithgow, Gloria Steinem, Nicholas Kristof, Jose Andres, and others who are willing to stand in their shoes and see the world, for a moment, through their eyes.

The first episode of the podcast will be available to stream at the conclusion of the evening's events.
