WHAT'S THE DEAL WITH Discwoman

What, so we're talking a computer lady here?

No, it's not a new piece of AI software or a sex robot. Discwoman is a powerful female DJ collective, agency and club night that represents a global community of 250+ women, trans women and genderqueer artists. Founded by Emma Burgess-Olson, Frankie Decaiza Hutchinson and Christine McCharen-Tran in New York in 2014, Discwoman was formed after they'd had enough of likeminded artists in their community not getting booked. They wanted to shine a light on all the great female, and female-identifying, badass DJs and producers in their orbit.

I see. And does Discwoman do events too?

Yes indeed. The good news is they're coming to London this week. But back in 2014, they launched the project with a two-day festival in Brooklyn and since then have reached out to 15 cities around the world, blessing places like Berghain with everything from chin-scratching electronica and experimental bass to no-messing techno. Music accolades aside, last year they were featured in the Forbes 30 Under 30 list, which helped to further bolster their impressive mantra: 'amplify each other'.

Who is in the DJ/producer crew?

Their collectivist approach ensures they bring through the best DJs and producers who are doing unique and socially conscious things in their respective scenes. A few members you may have heard spinning in clubs around the UK and Europe include co-founder Umfang (Emma). While DJ/producer Shyboi channels Caribbean and American culture through her dutty tune selection, using music to explore ideas of identity, power and history. NTS's Peach is also a proud member alongside bass boundary pusher Kamixlo.

When can we see them play?

Conveniently for Londoners, all four of these DJs are playing as part of the Southbank Centre's 'Concrete Lates' on Thursday August 30. ■ Hayley Joyes
