Health

Singaporeans have a high standard of health, as the healthcare system focuses on primary prevention. They have the world’s second highest life expectancy, 83 years old, and the second lowest infant mortality rate, 1.56 child deaths in the first year of life per 1,000 live births. Singapore ensures that their healthcare is affordable and accessible through government subsidies, individual private savings, and mandatory national medical saving schemes. Due to the effectiveness of healthcare, Singaporeans are living longer. By 2050, it is estimated that a third of the population will be made up of elderly individuals. The Singapore government must promptly invest in elderly medical specialists and facilities to address this growing population before it puts a strain on the healthcare system.

Culture

Singapore is a multi-lingual, multi-cultural, and multi-ethnic country, and home to many people of different national, religious, and ethnic origins. The ethnic groups for Singapore are Chinese 74.2%, Malay 13.7%, Indian 8.9%, and other 3.2% (2021). Malay includes indigenous Malays and Indonesians, Indian includes Indian, Pakistani, Bangladeshi, or Sri Lankan, and other ethnic groups includes Eurasians, Caucasians, Japanese, Filipino, and Vietnamese. Similar to their countries culture, Singaporean cuisine is largely influenced by different cultures and its main influences came from Chinese, Malay, and Indian cuisines. "Hawker culture" in Singapore is notable in Singaporean culture. Singaporean cuisine centers around the hawker culture in the country. They first began in the mid 1800s and were made up of street food stalls that sell a large variety of foods. In 2020, UNESCO inscribed Singapore's hawker culture on the UNESCO Representative List of the Intangible Cultural Heritage of Humanity. UNESCO described the hawker center as 'community dining rooms' where people from diverse backgrounds gather and share the experience of dining over breakfast, lunch, and dinner.
