Oh Sung (b. 1989) is a South Korean artist living in New Zealand. His work often explores themes of memory and identity, drawing from his experiences as a New Zealand-based artist. Oh Sung's work has been exhibited in various galleries and museums around the world. He is known for his use of found materials and his ability to create dynamic, interactive sculptures that engage the viewer. Oh Sung's work reflects his interest in the intersection of Eastern and Western cultures, and he seeks to challenge traditional notions of identity and belonging.
Guangyu Qiu graduated later of fine arts from Sun Yat-sen University of Fine Arts in 2004, one of a new generation of migrants drawn to study in New Zealand from South Korea, and including Joon Wha, Hye Ryeon, and Jae Hoon Lee.

Qiu moved to New Zealand in 1999 and, at the age of 17, won his first solo exhibition in his hometown of Seoul, where he is currently undertaking a residency in an art museum space founded and managed by well-known artist Choi Young-Min, who shares Oh’s playful sensibility.
