1920-2020
Throughout 2020, the United States is celebrating the centennial of the ratification of the 19th Amendment, which secured women’s constitutional right to vote. Today, more than 68 million American women vote in elections because of the courageous suffragists who never gave up the fight for equality. This centennial is an unparalleled opportunity to elevate women’s history and to commemorate a milestone of American democracy.

Use this toolkit as your guide to commemorating the centennial in your state and community.
THE WOMEN’S SUFFRAGE MOVEMENT

Suffragists began their organized fight for women’s equality in 1848 when they demanded the right to vote during the first women’s rights convention in Seneca Falls, New York. For the next 72 years, women leaders lobbied, marched, picketed, and protested for the right to the ballot. The U.S. House of Representatives finally approved the “Susan B. Anthony Amendment,” which guaranteed women the right to vote, on May 21, 1919. The U.S. Senate followed two weeks later and voted to approve the 19th Amendment on June 4, 1919. The 19th Amendment then went to the states, where it had to be ratified by three-fourths of the then 48 states to be added to the Constitution. Tennessee became the 36th and final state needed to ratify the 19th Amendment on August 18, 1920. On August 26, 1920, the U.S. Secretary of State issued a proclamation declaring the 19th Amendment ratified and officially part of the U.S. Constitution. Today, August 26th is celebrated annually as Women’s Equality Day.

GEORGIA QUICK FACTS

- Georgia ratified the 19th Amendment on February 20, 1970.
- Georgia was the first state to reject the 19th Amendment on July 24th, 1919.
- Efforts to promote women’s suffrage lagged in Georgia until Helen Augusta Howard established the Georgia Woman Suffrage Association in the 1890s.
- Suffrage organizations in Georgia included the Neighborhood Works of the National Federation of Colored Women’s Clubs, Georgia Women’s Suffrage Association, and the Atlanta Chapter of the League of Women Voters.
- Suffragists such as Lugenia Burns Hope, Helen Augusta Howard, Lucy Lane, Mary Latimer McLendon, and Eleanor Raoul were active in Georgia.
Women first organized and collectively fought for suffrage at the national level in July of 1848. Suffragists such as Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Lucretia Mott convened a meeting of over 300 people in Seneca Falls, New York. In the following decades, women marched, protested, lobbied, and even went to jail. By the 1870s, women pressured Congress to vote on an amendment that would recognize their suffrage rights. This amendment was sometimes called the Susan B. Anthony Amendment and became the 19th Amendment.

The amendment reads: "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of sex."

In the late 1800s, regional suffrage organizations began to form in states across the US. But the suffrage movement had roots in abolitionism (the movement to end slavery). As a result, southern women's suffrage groups were slower to organize. Efforts to promote women's suffrage lagged in Georgia until Helen Augusta Howard established the Georgia Woman Suffrage Association (GWSA) in the 1890s. Although initially the membership of the GWSA was primarily Howard's sisters and mother, she successfully convinced the National American Woman Suffrage Association (NAWSA) to hold the 1895 convention in Atlanta. It was the first time that NAWSA held a national meeting outside of Washington, D.C. and launched an effort to recruit southern white women to the cause.

Many Georgia suffrage organizations only granted membership to white women, and black women were excluded from the 1895 Atlanta convention. But African American women like Adella Hunt Logan, Mary McCurdy, and Janie Porter Barrett were instrumental in advancing women's suffrage on a national scale. Logan, born to a white father and African American mother, became involved in the National American Woman Suffrage Association (NAWSA). She also wrote articles for newspapers in favor of women's suffrage.

Mary McCurdy also used her writing skills to help the suffrage cause. She established a successful career as a journalist. McCurdy encouraged black women to speak out for their rights, even though they faced prejudiced due to their ethnicity and gender.

Other white suffrage groups were established in the 1910s, such as the Georgia Woman Equal Suffrage League. Some Georgia men also supported women's suffrage. Local lawyer Leonard Grossman established the Georgia Men's League for Woman Suffrage. But anti-suffrage organizations such as the National Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage (founded 1895) had a strong following. Like many other states, Georgia was divided on the issue of women's suffrage.

After decades of arguments for and against women's suffrage, Congress finally voted in favor of the 19th Amendment in 1919. After Congress passed the 19th Amendment, at least 36 states needed to vote in favor of it for it to become law. This process is called ratification.

On July 24, 1919 Georgia was the first state to reject the amendment. But by August of 1920, 36 states had ratified the 19th Amendment. On August 18, 1920, Tennessee became the 36th state to ratify the amendment, recognizing women's suffrage rights.

While women across the county were able to vote in the 1920 presidential election, Georgia women were not able to cast their ballots. The state of Georgia cited a rule that required voters to register 6 months before an election. Most other states waived this rule, allowing women to vote in the 1920 election. But women in Georgia had to wait until 1922 to take part in a national election. Georgia belatedly ratified the 19th Amendment on February 20, 1970.
