Learning is not only an academic endeavor but also an emotional one.

Three decades of research shows that the emotional climate of the classroom and the emotional state of the student impacts the way their brain functions and, thus their ability to absorb new information, problem solve, integrate information and form memory.

Adopting a positive psychology approach, Professor Waters will show teachers a range of evidence-based easy to implement strategies that can boost positive emotions in class.

“It was an absolutely great experience to have Lea spend the day with us – we learned so much from her and were inspired by her! Her wisdom and vitality totally energized us as we move towards embracing a strength-based and Pos Ed approach to student learning and wellbeing at Appleby.”
