CTCI co-principal investigator, Kelli Crane was invited to the first of its kind conference, Autism Speaks’ Transition Thought Leadership Summit. Through the summit, they brought thought leaders together to help catalyze innovations in programs and policies to improve transition to adulthood outcomes for youth with autism spectrum disorder through building consensus and fostering collaborations.

The two-day event consisted of participants identifying a shared vision for the future, change imperatives in practice and policies, and create strategies for stakeholders to address challenges people with autism face transitioning to careers, college, and community living and participation.

This meeting of the minds discussion brought the opportunity to share ideas to improve practices for kids with Autism.
