SecondBite
Annual Report 2011

Together
We are SecondBite

SecondBite is committed to making a positive difference to people by identifying sources of nutritious surplus fresh food and produce that might otherwise go to waste and facilitating its safe and timely distribution to agencies and people in need.
‘I believe any company that grows, packs and on sells fresh produce here in Australia has a responsibility to pass on what quality we cannot sell to the Australian market to a good cause like SecondBite, and Harvest Moon is very happy to support this wonderful cause.’

Todd Ashdown, Harvest Moon
‘SecondBite contribute a consistent supply of fresh and nutritious produce, delivered in a reliable, cheerful manner. As well as a variety of staple goods, they provide food that we could not offer due to prohibitive prices, e.g. quality meat and organic produce. SecondBite is a major factor in our budget planning.’

‘A highlight of the Food Angels program was learning to use a variety of vegetables.’

— Food Angels participant 2011.

At SecondBite, we acknowledge access to food as a basic human right. However, as many as 1.2 million Australians are regularly at risk of food insecurity. Food security is achieved when individuals can provide themselves with a safe, nutritious, affordable, non-emergency and culturally appropriate food supply. The detrimental effects of food insecurity can range from social isolation to increased risk of chronic disease and diminished health/economic status. When the purchasing of food becomes untenable, thousands of Australians seek food parcels and meals from Community Food Programs.

The determinants of individual food insecurity are complex. To gain a fuller understanding of the issue we established a dedicated Research & Development team in 2008. Our focus on robust and innovative research helps us to design and develop practical programs which provide long-term preventative solutions as we strive towards an Australia where everyone has access to fresh food.

SecondBite Food Angels

This flexible educational program provides fresh nutritious food and soft-skill development to families experiencing food insecurity. In collaboration with community and government organisations, SecondBite provides fresh food hampers, nutritional information and supports program evaluation. Case-management staff deliver tailored cooking, nutrition and budgeting classes. A memorable moment in the Tasmanian program occurred when the 78-year-old Food Angels volunteer, Ivy Chung, was featured in the Mercury newspaper and immediately afterwards the phone rang hot with support! In Victoria, one group of participants concluded their eight weeks of education with a MasterChef style cook-off. In front of a live audience, they demonstrated their new cooking skills by preparing frittatas and muffins with fresh rescued ingredients.

Food Rescue – A Fresh Approach

SecondBite commissioned a research project in 2010 to learn more about the health, social and nutritional impact of fresh rescued food for people who access Community Food Programs. Nine SecondBite recipient agencies participated, and the results, launched by Victorian Premier Ted Baillieu in March 2011, provided an insight into the outcomes and impact SecondBite is having across the 300 plus organisations we provide fresh food to every week, and what this means to the thousands of people who consume fresh rescued food every day.

• Free fresh rescued food significantly reduces costs for agencies.
• 77% of food used in the community meals was fresh rescued food, otherwise destined for land-fill.
• More support is needed to increase provision of fruit and dairy.

The most poignant results came from interviews with people who access the food programs:

• Fresh ingredients in the community meal provided an average 65 per cent of all fruit and vegetables consumed in the day.
• For 33 per cent, it was their only fruit and vegetables for the day.
• Positive nutritional and social outcomes were achieved by accessing community meals, which was particularly significant because an experience of social exclusion and poor nutrition was evident in the individuals interviewed.

‘…being on a pension you don’t get much after you’ve paid all your bills out for a fortnight, you’ve hardly got anything left to be able to go down the grocery store and say look, give me half a dozen of this and a dozen of that, you just haven’t got the means or the funds to do it…now and again, I’ll actually put aside money specifically…save up for something like a…huge bowl of fruit…’

Think Fresh – Fresh Food Education & Training

As a result of SecondBite’s ongoing consultation with the community and research, a need was identified to provide training and support for the staff and volunteers of Community Food Programs. It was evident that the wonderful work many thousands of people undertake every day to provide food to vulnerable people could be further enriched by nutrition education, food safety training and fresh food capacity building. The Community Nutrition Unit at DHHS Tasmania agreed, and together we are developing a community workforce training program to answer to this need. Development is close to completion and funding is now needed for roll out.

SecondBite’s unique position within the community sector provides us with the ability to understand need clearly, and by consulting with over 300 community food programs, we can turn research into results with relevant, practical and evidence-based programs, ensuring positive and sustainable change.

Thinking Ahead – The SecondBite Food Security Advisory Committee (FSAC)

The FSAC shapes SecondBite’s research agenda now and into the future, bringing an interdisciplinary approach to the complex problem of food insecurity. There is no one solution, but we are committed to improving systems for better social, environmental, and health outcomes, for the most vulnerable in our community.

Current members include experts from the fields of health, environment, food systems and homelessness:

• Assoc Prof Cate Burns (Chair) – Deakin University, WHO Collaborating Centre for Obesity Prevention.
• Rosemary Mckenzie – Research Fellow, Centre for Health Policy, Programs and Economics, Melbourne School of Population Health, University of Melbourne.
• Professor Craig Pearson – Director, Melbourne Sustainable Society Institute, University of Melbourne.
• Dr Kay Gibbons – Head of Nutrition Services at Royal Children’s Hospital, Melbourne. Honorary Senior Lecturer Monash University.
• Kirsten Larsen – Policy Challenges Research Manager, Victorian Eco Innovation Lab.
• Professor Chris Chamberlain – Director, Centre for Applied Social Research, RMIT.

Thank you to past member Professor Rob Moodie – Professor of Global Health at the Nossal Institute for his ongoing contribution.
‘SecondBite has enabled us to distribute surplus vegetables that we have grown in our community gardens to people at most risk of food insecurity in Tasmania’.

Louise Sullivan – Project Manager of Feeding the Future.
From a group of three volunteers moving just over 600 kg of food in 2005, SecondBite is now well and truly on the map – with operations in Victoria, Tasmania and Queensland and a national expansion underway.

For the community, by the community
SecondBite Community Connect™ is an innovative model of food rescue that facilitates the redistribution of surplus fresh food from local food donors, directly to local community food programs, using local volunteers. This cost effective and sustainable program was created in 2009, and in 2010 won the Victorian Community Award for ‘new ways to engage with the community’. SecondBite Community Connect is currently operating in Victoria, Tasmania and Queensland, and is leading the sector for best practice.

Expansion through partnerships
SecondBite believes that there is huge potential for increasing our impact through partnerships and collaborations. In 2011, we launched a pilot with the Australian Red Cross in Victoria, with a view to training Red Cross volunteers to be local facilitators of SecondBite Community Connect, helping us to support regional communities in the most sustainable, efficient and productive way possible.

Over the coming year, we aim to build on the success of this model with a targeted roll-out plan that will enable ‘community connections’ across all states and territories, focusing on areas of greatest disadvantage. This will be a period of high growth, sustainable outcomes and, most importantly, large volumes of nutritious food rescued for people who are struggling to gain access to fresh food in regional areas. We are grateful to the William Buckland Foundation, The Dyson Bequest and the Yulgilbar Foundation for having the vision to fund this initiative through research and development and into roll out phase. In September 2011, we launched a major national partnership with Coles supermarkets. Over the next 2.5 years, Coles Community Food with SecondBite will provide more than five million meals to Australians who don’t have access to a safe, regular and affordable food supply. This is a national program with a local focus. It is unique in the food retail and food rescue sectors, as the national program strategy and execution is coordinated exclusively by one organisation, SecondBite. We were chosen by Coles due to our expertise in rescuing fresh food, focus on food safety procedures and quality control and our unique SecondBite Community Connect™ model. A 12-month pilot helped us to develop the right processes and showed us how passionate the in-store teams were at Coles to ensure that food that may not meet their quality standards for sale, but is still nutritious and safe to eat, is donated.

We are delivering the program in both metropolitan and regional communities, using a collaborative model to bring this program to life. In Victoria, Tasmania and Queensland, we use our own infrastructure to collect from stores and in regional areas SecondBite Community Connect is implemented. Where there are other community groups with existing infrastructure across Australia, we have invited them to come on board and collect from their local Coles stores to ensure we do not duplicate resources that already exist in the sector.

Coles Community Food with SecondBite will follow a 2.5-year national rollout, with approximately 250 stores participating by the end of 2012, 450 in its second year and 650 stores by year three. A great result for local communities and the environment.
Since beginning, SecondBite Community Connect has facilitated the redistribution of approximately 96 tonnes of surplus fresh food to 26 community food programs. This equates to 193,368 hearty nutritious meals, 87 tonnes of greenhouse gas emissions saved and over 700,000 serves of fruit and vegetables.

Queensland
8.4 tonnes of food has been rescued via SecondBite Community Connect to date, and our SecondBite van will be busy on the streets of Brisbane from January 2012.

Victoria
85 tonnes per month is rescued and redistributed by our vans in Melbourne and Geelong, and around the state via SecondBite Community Connect.

Tasmania
Food donors from around the state are helping us to provide 20 tonnes per month to over 50 community food programs.
Get involved
Time. A most precious resource in all our lives. So, we are thrilled that more than 500 people give SecondBite their time by volunteering with us.

Our move to a larger warehouse and office space in Melbourne, the growth of SecondBite in Geelong and Hobart, and SecondBite Community Connect around the country have seen us increase our operations to better meet community need. Volunteers have been vital to this growth.

Since July 2010, SecondBite volunteers have increased by 25 per cent, from 410 volunteers to 515 (at the time of writing). Volunteers bring so much to our organisation: skills, advice, experience, vision, leadership and friendship. It’s great that we can offer a broad range of roles, such as collecting and sorting food at markets, administration, accounting, graphic design, working in the warehouse and delivering food to community food programs.

The Big Picture Program, funded by the City of Melbourne and the Scanlon Foundation, was developed by SecondBite to provide skills, confidence and personal growth for vulnerable members of the community via a structured 12-week course that involved volunteering in the SecondBite warehouse among other activities. We have just secured two more years for this successful program, which has shifted to focus more on warehousing skills to answer to our operational needs and to acknowledge that a real strength of the program was the practical experience gained in the SecondBite warehouse, where real world work skills were learned within a supportive learning environment.

SecondBite is continuing to work with job placement agencies and community food programs to recruit volunteers onto a practical voluntary placement, supporting people on their path to gaining paid employment or further training.

Louise volunteers in our Hobart warehouse 12 hours per week, ‘I am enjoying giving back to the community by being at SecondBite. I am learning different warehouse skills and safe food handling when making up food hampers. I am meeting a nice mix of people who call by to collect the hampers. Working with a bunch of other volunteers is a blast as we all learn and work hard, having fun as well. All the guys in the office are really good to work for.’

George does a weekly delivery to three agencies in Melbourne every Tuesday ‘I love my delivery rounds (3). Because I have a regular run, I’ve made many friends (that’s a plus). The team at SecondBite are a delight to be with (that’s a plus) and, at the end of the deliveries, I feel that satisfaction that I’ve made (in a small way) life a little better for people (another plus) Wow! Three pluses ain’t bad!’

As we expand nationally, the need for volunteers is growing and we will rely on these wonderful people to ensure we are reaching those who need access to fresh nutritious food around Australia.

A huge thanks for your time.

Our goal for the coming year is to provide two million kg of fresh food, enough for more than four million meals to communities in all states of Australia.

SecondBite sets pace as innovator – in all we do

At the recent APEC meeting, Barack Obama presented a key theme: the need for innovation to help the world emerge from its current financial crisis.

Innovation has been a key theme for the President throughout this year, featuring in his State of the Nation address. SecondBite understands that need drives innovation, indeed it is community need that has driven us at every stage of our development. Our limited resources have lead to fresh ideas, innovative solutions and maximum efficiency in all our decision making. From the day we said, ‘Why can’t we use this food?’, which everyone said must be thrown out, we have been developing new and better ways to redistribute surplus fresh food that would otherwise go to waste.

SecondBite Community Connect™, an innovative model that empowers and enables local communities to do it for themselves. All this has led us here – SecondBite Community Connect: operations in Victoria, Tasmania and Queensland; an imminent launch in Brisbane; and a national partnership with Coles supermarkets. With your support, these activities will help us ensure that communities around the country, metro and regional, are able to access fresh surplus food that would otherwise go to waste.

Our goal for the coming year is to double our efforts and provide two million kg of fresh food, enough for more than four million meals to communities in all states of Australia. This food will be fresh and healthy produce. We also seek to diversify our funding streams and continue our research and advocacy work at a national level to ensure that the community sector has a voice when government or other stakeholders are addressing the subject of food security. We are striving to ensure fresh food redistribution is considered a fundamental part of our future food system, and all Australians have access to and can afford fresh nutritious food for their families.

SecondBite Future Trust – a sustainable future

Innovation has driven our funding strategies with the SecondBite Future Trust a key element in this plan. As I write, the Future Trust is approaching $1 million, and we are extremely grateful to those donors, in particular Mr Geoff Handbury, who are helping us to lay the foundation for a long-term, sustainable organisation. Led by Sarah Curtis, the Future Trust seeks investments from individuals and corporations that will support our work in perpetuity. I invite you to support this long-term funding initiative via a donation or a bequest and help us reach an endowment of $5 million by 2015.

New Board members

I am very pleased to report that we have appointed some key Board members to build our Board strength. These are David Williamson, Chief Legal Counsel at BHP Billiton, Andrew Monotti, Partner at Mallesons Stephen Jaques, and Flavia Gobbo, Legal Counsel at Telstra. Flavia is based in Brisbane. All are passionate about rescuing surplus food and getting it to people in need. I welcome them all to the Board and thank them for giving their time and passion to SecondBite. Of course, I thank our longer standing Board Members who continue to support and innovate on behalf of SecondBite in so many ways.

Thank you to everyone who helps SecondBite, from the volunteers who do the hard slog, to the donors and supporters, you make a difference in Australia. I specifically want to thank our staff led by Katy and Zoe – Andrew, Andy, Arvinder, Bev, Brian, Chris H, Chris S, Danny, Daniel, Doug, Emily, Jaden, Mark, Parry, Pat, Paul, Rebecca, Russell, Stacey, Steve, Trevor.

Thanks also to our wonderful ambassadors and all those who have donated food, ideas, creative input, funds and time that keep us going. In a world of increasing uncertainty, I confidently predict that 2012 will be another very big year for SecondBite. Thank you.
It is the community we serve who inspire SecondBite's growth and lead us in the right direction.

Each year in my annual report message, I open by talking about my astonishment at the achievements of the SecondBite team; the incredible courage we witness daily among the community we exist to serve; the tireless energy and commitment of our amazing volunteers who consistently grow in numbers year on year; the extraordinary generosity of all of our financial supporters, pro-bono suppliers and food donors; and this year is no different.

What is different this year is where we sit in the both the growth and the life cycle of our organisation.

There's no denying the exponential growth of SecondBite. Five years ago, we were a board of five with just one member of paid staff and 37 volunteers. Today there is a board of 12 people supporting a team of 15 members of staff and 515 volunteers. The number of kilograms collected and redistributed has risen from 655 kg in 2005 to 1,000,000 kg this year, and the number of community food programs receiving fresh food is up from just five in Victoria to 315 across Victoria, Tasmania and Queensland. Most importantly, hundreds of thousands of people have had access to fresh nutritious food who would otherwise have gone without.

And it is the people we exist to serve who have inspired SecondBite's growth and have ultimately led us in the right direction. There is not a program that has been developed within SecondBite that wasn't asked for, or suggested by, the very people who ultimately receive the fresh food that we deliver. It has been their voices that have led us from Melbourne to Tasmania, from the city to country Victoria and now further afield to Queensland.

It was through collaborative consultation that Community Connect was created and developed, and it is by the request of the community that we have begun a feasibility study to serve remote indigenous communities.

Next year, this community voice will lead us to provide fresh nutritious food to some of the most remote corners of this diverse and beautiful country, from Karratha to Mt Isa, from Alice Springs to Lake Tyers – made possible by our recently secured national partnership with Coles, which plans to deliver 3.8 million kg of additional fresh food into the SecondBite system over the next two years.

We continue to run a very efficient and economical ship due to our collaborative approach to growth. In metro areas, we work in partnership with groups who are supporting the local community with training programs; AGesture and AGB, and in regional areas we have partnered with the Red Cross and Foodbank, who will assist us in the delivery of our Coles Community Food with SecondBite Program.

In addition to addressing the existing unmet need, we are acutely aware that the number of people struggling to feed their families is growing. With a two speed economy, some may not be feeling the pinch, but unfortunately many Australians increasingly are. The rising costs of living means that many low income families have nothing left to fill their cupboards once the bills are paid. Higher fresh food costs will primarily affect vulnerable low-income communities.

It is critical to remember that with growth comes responsibility, and with hundreds of agencies relying on our fresh food deliveries, ensuring the sustainability of our service is vital.

Interestingly, this growth comes at a pivotal point in our life cycle. At the "ripe" old age of six, SecondBite is no longer regarded as a seedling organisation nor is it fully established or mature.

We no longer meet the criteria of many of our seed funders who support innovative start-ups and who increasingly have maximum funding terms of 1–3 years. These generous and progressive supporters have helped put SecondBite on the map and our challenge now is to secure established long-term investment partners who share our vision of a healthier community.

Attracting funding for long-term programs is not an easy proposition. Persistent problems such as food insecurity are complex and frequently misunderstood. There is no simple answer, and unless supporters can be encouraged to fund core operational costs and research, then long-term preventative solutions will not be found.

I believe wholeheartedly that our incredible supporters past, present (and future) will dig deep to help us rise to this challenge and that the people at the very heart of our organisation – our volunteers, Board, team, supporters, food donors and the community – will ensure that we successfully navigate the coming years to bring us closer to achieving our goal – to ensure that every Australian has access to fresh food.

To everyone who has been part of the SecondBite story so far, a massive thank you.
Our results from 2010/11
‘Your work has been such a great investment for us, the returns are outstanding.’

Genevieve Timmons, Portland House Foundation

It’s been another huge year of progress and impact for SecondBite. Since beginning in 2005, we have now rescued and redistributed over 2,500,000 kg of fresh food, enough to provide five million meals. Importantly, we are now supporting over 300 Community Food Programs across three states, all of whom are providing vital services to their local community. In FY2011, 86% of the food moved by SecondBite was fresh fruit, vegetables, meat, dairy and bakery.

Our work to date equates to:
• Providing $7.5 million worth of food directly to community organisations;
• Saving of 2,250,000 kg of CO₂ emissions from the atmosphere;
• Saving 129 million litres of embodied water that is not wasted.

To achieve these results, and more going forward, we now have two clearly defined operational models of fresh food redistribution:
1) SecondBite Metro, where refrigerated vans and warehouse infrastructure is the most economical and efficient way to rescue and redistribute fresh food. We have eight generously donated vehicles operating in Melbourne, Geelong and Hobart, with operations in Brisbane and Launceston due to start early in 2012.

2) SecondBite Community Connect™ a model developed in response to community need in regional and remote areas, which enables a local food donor to connect directly with a local community food program utilising local volunteers. This model is operating in Victoria, Tasmania and Brisbane and has enabled 96 tonnes of fresh food to be diverted from landfill and delivered to local people in need.

Earlier this year, we released the results of a Social Return on Investment analysis completed by SVA consulting. SROI is an innovative approach to measuring the impact of a project, program, social enterprise, non-profit organisation or policy, by providing an estimate of the total financial value created (including the social impact) and comparing it to the investment required to generate these benefits. The organisational SROI analysis found that for every $1 donated, SecondBite creates $4.42 of social value. Our commitment to ensuring our financial donors receive the maximum impact for their dollar is highlighted through this study, both through our desire to conduct it, and the result it conveyed.

As demand for our service continues to grow, we will continue to work tirelessly to ensure community food programs have access to fresh healthy food, and that we maximise every dollar donated.

Our wonderful team of ambassadors help to raise our profile in their local communities and at a national level.

SecondBite achieves social impact due to the commitment of the Board, the staff, volunteers, Future Trust Board, advisory committees in Tasmania, Queensland and New South Wales, the SecondBite Food Security Advisory Community, and our team of ambassadors. All are passionate about SecondBite’s mission, and only together can we achieve it.

Our wonderful team of ambassadors help to raise our profile in their local communities and at a national level. They are: Andrew Balaam, Director of St Laurence Community Services and Adviser of Costa Group; Suzie Batten, a strategic communications consultant; Ian Cover, ABC radio presenter and founding member of the Coodabeen Champions; Robert Doyle, Lord Mayor of Melbourne; Penny Fowler, a business and marketing executive, director of various private companies, including K5 group and greentomato cars; Trevor Green, previously Managing Director of the Melbourne Symphony Orchestra; Derek Guilie, ABC Broadcaster and presenter; Julie Heath, works in community health in Geelong, and constantly observes the impacts of poor nutrition; Antony Heath, a financial services professional based in Geelong; Paul Lappin, Chairman and co-owner of Peter Rowland Catering; Dale Monteith, Chief Executive of the VRC; Prof. Rob Moodie, Professor of Global Health at the Nossal Institute for Global Health at the University of Melbourne. Chair of the National Preventative Health Task Force; Elaine Reeves, Mercury food editor, executive committee member of Slow Food Hobart; Michael Short, The Age editorial Board Member and New Media Editor; Arianne Spratt, TV chef on Mornings with David and Kim; Natasha Stott Despoja, former Senator for South Australia. An Honorary Visiting Research Fellow at The University of Adelaide and columnist for The Adelaide Advertiser and The Business Spectator; Geoffrey Wilson, one of Australia’s most respected and well-known investment fund managers.

At this stage in our growth, we are acutely aware of our responsibility to the community. Hundreds of agencies rely on SecondBite and therefore it is vital to ensure the sustainability of our service. We began the SecondBite Future Trust based on this understanding, and this is one innovative approach to ensuring SecondBite has funding available in perpetuity. The SecondBite Future Trust Board shares our long-term vision for SecondBite and is aiming for a corpus of $5 million over the next three years to help fund this growth and expansion.
