Misgendering & Pronouns

A guide to using inclusive language when speaking languages other than English
What are pronouns?

Pronouns are words used to refer to a person rather than using their name.

Some pronouns are gendered like she/her/hers or he/him/his and some are gender neutral, like they/them/their.

You cannot tell what pronouns people use by looking at them.

Using the right pronouns for someone is super important because it affirms the way that person sees themselves.

Some people, including those who identify as trans and gender diverse, may ask others to change the pronouns used to refer to them to affirm their gender.
WHAT IF I MAKE A MISTAKE?

People may worry that they will offend or be embarrassed if they use the wrong term, name or pronoun, particularly for trans and gender diverse people.

It's important to try to use respectful language and some mistakes are understandable, particularly when you are learning. If you make a mistake, apologise promptly and move on. Don't dwell on it, and don't give up – keep trying to get it right.

Repeated mistakes indicate a lack of respect, and can be very distressing. If it continues or is deliberate, it could constitute bullying or discrimination which is unlawful.

HOW SHOULD I WELCOME PEOPLE TO MEETINGS OR EVENTS?

You can easily include everyone and every gender by saying things like “Welcome, everyone” or “Good morning, folks”. These broader terms can also be useful when sending emails to large groups or departments.
What is misgendering?

Misgendering means using language to refer to someone that does not match that person’s gender, for example pronouns (she/he/they). Not using a person’s pronouns is a form of bullying and really hurts because it tells the person that you don’t respect them.

Misgendering can happen by genuine mistake, particularly if the person has only recently affirmed their gender, it may take a while for people to stop using the old pronouns and name.

Misgendering can sometimes happen on purpose, a person might demonstrate a lack of respect by purposefully misusing pronouns or the trans or gender diverse person’s birth name (the name given to them at birth that does not match their affirmed gender, sometimes called a “dead name”) rather than their preferred name. They may also refer to the trans or gender diverse person as “it” or “that” which is highly offensive.
How can we use inclusive language when speaking languages other than English?

Whether we are using, learning or teaching different languages at school it is important to consider our pronoun and gender-neutral language use. By doing so, we are ensuring we are being respectful of others and the way they identify.

Many different languages have gender-neutral terms built into their language, whilst many others have created inclusive terms to modernize the language and keep up with the times. Some romance languages are problematic for trans and non-binary people, as the language is deeply rooted in the two binary genders, making it difficult for some people to see their identity reflected in the language. Below is a list of examples of pronoun and gender-neutral terms available for use across a variety of languages.

French

French

- iel / iel is the main gender-neutral pronoun used in French and is a contraction of the two binary pronouns “il” and “elle”.

Arabic

Modern standard Arabic, based on Koranic classical Arabic has a dual option for nouns and verbs that doesn’t imply a specific gender:

- ِهمَا (huma) - They
- ِأَنْتَما (intuma) - You

Chinese

In Chinese, verbally all gendered pronouns sound the same, and so they technically can be gender neutral. Below are some useful examples:

- 同学 (tong xue) - Gender-neutral term for a classmate
- 孩子 (hai zi) – Gender-neutral term for a young person.
Japanese is full of different language features that communicate your gender identity. In English, we rely on others to call us by our preferred pronouns, such as “he,” “she,” or “they,” but in Japanese, the power to express your gender through language often rests in your hands. (This information requires some understanding of Hiragana). The term “Jibun” is increasing in popularity for non-binary people to use as a first-person pronoun.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>First Person (“I”)a</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Masculine</td>
<td>Feminine</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>俺</td>
<td>僕</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Second Person (“You”)</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Masculine</td>
<td>Feminine</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>てめえ</td>
<td>お前</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

German: Xier, Xieser, Xiem – “They, them theirs”. Used as a singular translation of they/them pronouns from English.

Italian, as with other romance languages, presents challenges for inclusion of non-binary genders in that grammatically there only exists masculine and feminine genders. However, different approaches may transform the way Italian is spoken to make it more gender inclusive.

- Lo - First-person: I
- Loro - They/Them:

Japanese: Deutsche

Italiano: Italian

日語: Japanese
Sentence Enders:

Another major way that gender is expressed in Japanese is using sentence enders. These refer to conversational particles, like よ and ね, as well as question particles, like か or かな, that come at the end of Japanese sentences.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Masculine</th>
<th>Neutral</th>
<th>Feminine</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Conversation Enders</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>そうだぜ</td>
<td>そうだよ</td>
<td>そうよ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>そうだな</td>
<td>そうだね</td>
<td>そうね</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>行くぞ</td>
<td>行くよ</td>
<td>行くわよ</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Many young people are also re-creating gender neutral terms within the language. A popular colloquial term with young people is “Chuusei” (pronounced chew-say) and can be written like this: ちゅうせい (中性).

Spanish

When learning and speaking Spanish we are used to: “el” for he/him/his, and “ella” for she/her/hers. “Elle” is used for they/them and “elles” for theirs.
Wear It Purple Incorporated is an ACNC registered charity ABN 39 634 641 162. WIP believes the information in this document is correct at the time of issue, but no warranty of accuracy or reliability is given and no responsibility arising in any way for errors or omissions. This guidebook is aimed at building awareness about Wear It Purple and the LGBTQ+ Community.

© 2021 Wear It Purple Incorporated. All rights reserved

Wear It Purple acknowledges the Traditional Owners of country throughout Australia, their diversity, histories, knowledge and their continuing connections to land and community. We pay our respects to all Australian Indigenous Peoples and their cultures, and to Elders of past, present and emerging.