A food system is an interconnected web of activities, resources, and people involved in keeping us healthy and nourished.

It is a reflection of social, cultural, political, economic, health, and environmental conditions, and is affected by decisions at the household, local, regional, national, and global levels.