EDUCATIONAL MISSION

The George C. Marshall International Center leads robust programs across the learning life cycle from middle school students up through post-graduate and professional education. We engage more than 4,000 individuals each year through our speaker series; leadership seminars; public tours of the Marshall’s historic home; and case-study experiences in class rooms. These programs aim to inspire service, unwavering integrity, and visionary leadership. By focusing on three prominent aspects of Marshall’s role in world affairs, we bring to life this important legacy.

This is home…a real home after forty-one years of wandering.”

GENERAL MARSHALL, 1942

General and Mrs. Marshall purchased Dodona Manor in 1941 as a place for refuge, relaxation, and as a future home for their eventual retirement from public service. His indispensable leadership to the nation, however, continued to be summoned for the next 10 years. During one of the most tumultuous periods in world history they lived here, tended their gardens and hosted the most influential leaders of the day.

A plan to tear down Dodona Manor and redevelop the grounds for commercial offices was put forward in the 1980s as the Marshall’s home had fallen into grave disrepair. Local citizens and Europeans who had benefitted from the Marshall Plan formed a coalition to save the historic site and make it available to the public to share the story of George C. Marshall’s character and contributions. Dodona Manor is a local treasure with world-wide significance given Marshall’s legacy of visionary leadership in war and in peace. The George C. Marshall International Center continues to preserve Dodona Manor and leads educational programs based on Marshall’s leadership and character.
