International style of a different kind, namely Asian and South American influences, marks the design of this Palm Springs, California, home. Countered by burnt-wood siding, white stucco walls and soffits frame deep recesses of glass, offering access to clear air, mountain vistas and a pair of enticing pools that wrap this desert home in water.

This 1-acre garden in Coral Gables, Florida, underwent a major environmentally sensitive renovation that involved redesigning hardscape elements as well as modifying and adding water features. The irrigation system was tweaked; lighting and plant material were also introduced. A high priority: protecting and preserving several existing, mature live oak trees.

Readers' Choice, Classic Interior Design

For New York City clients with a burgeoning contemporary art collection and a new apartment, a subtle backdrop is the best way to showcase their treasures. Neutral walls topped by a Greek Revival-style cornice balance wood flooring, while flat-panel shades adorn windows. Contemporary furniture and light fixtures also defer to the art on display.
