PRESS RELEASE: FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Contact: Allison Nance, Managing Director
allison@thenicholsonproject.org

March 29, 2021

What: Notes from VEGA, new work by A.J. McCLenon
Exhibition Dates: April 10 - 25, 2021
Black Hole Programming: Saturday, April 24th, 12-5pm
Gallery Hours: 12pm-4pm on Saturdays, April 10th, 17th, 24th, and Sunday, April 25th
More Info: www.thenicholsonproject.org/exhibition-vega

Description: The Nicholson Project is proud to present Notes from VEGA, new work by Nicholson’s Artist-in-Residence, A.J. McCLenon. The exhibition features work derived from McCLenon’s ongoing VEGA series that imagines a dystopian future and parallel universes. In Notes from VEGA, the viewers are invited to take a glimpse at the resilience of Black people and their ability to adapt and evolve in any circumstance. When the earth is no longer able to sustain their livelihoods and options are limited, they return to water—the source of life. In tandem with the exhibition, on Saturday, April 24th, McCLenon will create a one-day participatory Black Hole performance and activation where visitors are invited to help predict DC’s future and the role that generations of DC natives will play in VEGA.

Notes from VEGA, a new body of work from A.J. McClenon, derives from McClenon’s ongoing VEGA project and is presented as the stage of a dystopian future. Set in the year 2112, 63 years after the “Post-Post-Post Movement,” the government is executing its Universal Relocation Project, (URP) and leaving Earth in a large machine fast enough to orbit a black hole. Three leading Black physicists, Vega, Dr. Kramoris (aka D’Ram), and Dr. Dahnara Bektii (aka Nara), work undercover with the Futurist Freedom Party (FFP) to help those left behind by securing technology for life to survive in Earth's deep oceans.

An interdisciplinary artist, McClenon weaves together performances, writing, video, and mixed-media drawings, collages and objects to share this story. In Notes from VEGA, we are invited to take a glimpse at the resilience of Black people, and their ability to adapt and evolve in any circumstance. When the earth is no longer able to sustain their livelihoods and options are limited, they return to water -- the source of life.

McClenon’s choice of mixed media collage for this series encompass the idea of reshaping the self. The use of calming blues and black silhouettes breathe life into modified souls. McClenon asks the viewers to step into this familiar yet abstract future. You are present in the artist’s vision but also encouraged to create and share your own.

A.J. McClenon is a multi-disciplinary artist born and raised in Washington, DC and currently residing in Chicago. She is deeply invested in leveling the hierarchies of truth and using personal narrative to speak on political and cultural amnesia and their absurdities. For more information about A.J. McClenon, visit www.thenicholsonproject.org/2021-aj.

During McClenon’s residency at The Nicholson Project, McClenon has been paired with Nicholson’s Guest Curator, Oshun Layne of Dashboard, a lab co-founded in 2010 by Courtney Hammond and Beth Malone for redefining space with art and imagination. For more information on Dashboard, visit www.dashboard.us.

---

The Nicholson Project is a paid artist residency program and neighborhood garden in Washington, DC’s Fairlawn neighborhood. Our mission is to support, provide opportunities, engage, and amplify artists and creatives from our community and the local artist community—particularly artists of color and those from Ward 7 and 8—while engaging our neighbors through community-based programming. We are located at 2310 Nicholson Street SE, Washington, DC. Our gallery is open Saturdays April 10th, 17th, 24th, and Sunday, April 25th, from 12-4pm. For more information about The Nicholson Project, visit www.thenicholsonproject.org.
High Resolution Images Available Upon Request