The experience of learning how kids act is a big one. I would have enjoyed as a teenager, to try our best to understand them and work closely with them, to help them overcome the difficulties they may have.

—Addison Corp member

MALT interns and counselor-in-training

by Jamie Brookside, the CIT

"Surprisingly, through social media posts, they found and hired 117 out of 150. Each CIT is set to work two to three weeks of camp, which adds up to three weeks of work with the CITs. It turned out fantastically," Cutler said.

In addition to having fun, Venolia said one of her favorite parts of working with the CITs is overhearing their conversations with the campers, noticing the small details. "Oh, your backpack strap is twisted."

Middlebury Union Middle School student Juliette Fitzsimmons, who attended MALT with Vanoua, said that her favorite activity at MALT camp was looking for reptiles and fungi in the woods.

She found working with the young campers to be fulfilling, but also said that the youngsters could at times get a little rambunctious.

"There's certainly crying from me expected," Orton said. "They're five-to-eight-year-olds so a lot of sobbing, she said. Orton figured out earlier in the day how to deal with sobbing children.

"Surprisingly: distract them," she said. "Say, 'there's a fun stick over there.'"

CIT Interns help out at Middlebury Area Land Trust camp

The 13-year-old CIT from Weybridge helps sanitize the small details: 'Oh, your backpack strap is twisted."

MALS intern Cleo Vanoua

"It was looking for reptiles and fungi in the woods. She found. Fitzsimmons said that her favorite activity at MALT camp was finding a big one I would have enjoyed as a teenager, to try our best to understand them and work closely with them, to help them overcome the difficulties they may have.

"The experience of learning how kids act is a big one. I would have enjoyed as a teenager, to try our best to understand them and work closely with them, to help them overcome the difficulties they may have.

"Surprisingly, through social media posts, they found and hired 117 out of 150. Each CIT is set to work two to three weeks of camp, which adds up to three weeks of work with the CITs. It turned out fantastically," Cutler said.

In addition to having fun, Venolia said one of her favorite parts of working with the CITs is overhearing their conversations with the campers, noticing the small details. "Oh, your backpack strap is twisted."

Middlebury Union Middle School student Juliette Fitzsimmons, who attended MALT with Vanoua, said that her favorite activity at MALT camp was looking for reptiles and fungi in the woods.

She found working with the young campers to be fulfilling, but also said that the youngsters could at times get a little rambunctious.

"There's certainly crying from me expected," Orton said. "They're five-to-eight-year-olds so a lot of sobbing, she said. Orton figured out earlier in the day how to deal with sobbing children.

"Surprisingly: distract them," she said. "Say, 'there's a fun stick over there.'"

CIT Interns help out at Middlebury Area Land Trust camp

The 13-year-old CIT from Weybridge helps sanitize the small details: 'Oh, your backpack strap is twisted."

MALS intern Cleo Vanoua

"It was looking for reptiles and fungi in the woods. She found. Fitzsimmons said that her favorite activity at MALT camp was finding a big one I would have enjoyed as a teenager, to try our best to understand them and work closely with them, to help them overcome the difficulties they may have.

"The experience of learning how kids act is a big one. I would have enjoyed as a teenager, to try our best to understand them and work closely with them, to help them overcome the difficulties they may have.

"Surprisingly, through social media posts, they found and hired 117 out of 150. Each CIT is set to work two to three weeks of camp, which adds up to three weeks of work with the CITs. It turned out fantastically," Cutler said.

In addition to having fun, Venolia said one of her favorite parts of working with the CITs is overhearing their conversations with the campers, noticing the small details. "Oh, your backpack strap is twisted."

Middlebury Union Middle School student Juliette Fitzsimmons, who attended MALT with Vanoua, said that her favorite activity at MALT camp was looking for reptiles and fungi in the woods.

She found working with the young campers to be fulfilling, but also said that the youngsters could at times get a little rambunctious.

"There's certainly crying from me expected," Orton said. "They're five-to-eight-year-olds so a lot of sobbing, she said. Orton figured out earlier in the day how to deal with sobbing children.

"Surprisingly: distract them," she said. "Say, 'there's a fun stick over there.'"

CIT Interns help out at Middlebury Area Land Trust camp

The 13-year-old CIT from Weybridge helps sanitize the small details: 'Oh, your backpack strap is twisted."

MALS intern Cleo Vanoua

"It was looking for reptiles and fungi in the woods. She found. Fitzsimmons said that her favorite activity at MALT camp was finding a big one I would have enjoyed as a teenager, to try our best to understand them and work closely with them, to help them overcome the difficulties they may have.

"The experience of learning how kids act is a big one. I would have enjoyed as a teenager, to try our best to understand them and work closely with them, to help them overcome the difficulties they may have.

"Surprisingly, through social media posts, they found and hired 117 out of 150. Each CIT is set to work two to three weeks of camp, which adds up to three weeks of work with the CITs. It turned out fantastically," Cutler said.

In addition to having fun, Venolia said one of her favorite parts of working with the CITs is overhearing their conversations with the campers, noticing the small details. "Oh, your backpack strap is twisted."

Middlebury Union Middle School student Juliette Fitzsimmons, who attended MALT with Vanoua, said that her favorite activity at MALT camp was looking for reptiles and fungi in the woods.

She found working with the young campers to be fulfilling, but also said that the youngsters could at times get a little rambunctious.

"There's certainly crying from me expected," Orton said. "They're five-to-eight-year-olds so a lot of sobbing, she said. Orton figured out earlier in the day how to deal with sobbing children.

"Surprisingly: distract them," she said. "Say, 'there's a fun stick over there.'"

CIT Interns help out at Middlebury Area Land Trust camp

The 13-year-old CIT from Weybridge helps sanitize the small details: 'Oh, your backpack strap is twisted."

MALS intern Cleo Vanoua

"It was looking for reptiles and fungi in the woods. She found. Fitzsimmons said that her favorite activity at MALT camp was finding a big one I would have enjoyed as a teenager, to try our best to understand them and work closely with them, to help them overcome the difficulties they may have.

"The experience of learning how kids act is a big one. I would have enjoyed as a teenager, to try our best to understand them and work closely with them, to help them overcome the difficulties they may have.

"Surprisingly, through social media posts, they found and hired 117 out of 150. Each CIT is set to work two to three weeks of camp, which adds up to three weeks of work with the CITs. It turned out fantastically," Cutler said.

In addition to having fun, Venolia said one of her favorite parts of working with the CITs is overhearing their conversations with the campers, noticing the small details. "Oh, your backpack strap is twisted."

Middlebury Union Middle School student Juliette Fitzsimmons, who attended MALT with Vanoua, said that her favorite activity at MALT camp was looking for reptiles and fungi in the woods.

She found working with the young campers to be fulfilling, but also said that the youngsters could at times get a little rambunctious.

"There's certainly crying from me expected," Orton said. "They're five-to-eight-year-olds so a lot of sobbing, she said. Orton figured out earlier in the day how to deal with sobbing children.

"Surprisingly: distract them," she said. "Say, 'there's a fun stick over there.'"

CIT Interns help out at Middlebury Area Land Trust camp

The 13-year-old CIT from Weybridge helps sanitize the small details: 'Oh, your backpack strap is twisted."

MALS intern Cleo Vanoua

"It was looking for reptiles and fungi in the woods. She found. Fitzsimmons said that her favorite activity at MALT camp was finding a big one I would have enjoyed as a teenager, to try our best to understand them and work closely with them, to help them overcome the difficulties they may have.

"The experience of learning how kids act is a big one. I would have enjoyed as a teenager, to try our best to understand them and work closely with them, to help them overcome the difficulties they may have.

"Surprisingly, through social media posts, they found and hired 117 out of 150. Each CIT is set to work two to three weeks of camp, which adds up to three weeks of work with the CITs. It turned out fantastically," Cutler said.

In addition to having fun, Venolia said one of her favorite parts of working with the CITs is overhearing their conversations with the campers, noticing the small details. "Oh, your backpack strap is twisted."

Middlebury Union Middle School student Juliette Fitzsimmons, who attended MALT with Vanoua, said that her favorite activity at MALT camp was looking for reptiles and fungi in the woods.

She found working with the young campers to be fulfilling, but also said that the youngsters could at times get a little rambunctious.

"There's certainly crying from me expected," Orton said. "They're five-to-eight-year-olds so a lot of sobbing, she said. Orton figured out earlier in the day how to deal with sobbing children.

"Surprisingly: distract them," she said. "Say, 'there's a fun stick over there.'"