SUMMARY
The Opportunity Center is a Santa Clara County supportive housing program jointly run by two nonprofit groups: Abode Services and Community Working Group (CWG).

The Opportunity Center is an affordable housing community and service center in the city of Palo Alto.

It provides permanent supportive housing to rehouse formerly homeless individuals in Santa Clara County, which has 10,028 people experiencing homelessness, according to a 2022 county survey.

Abode Services, the Bay Area’s largest provider of housing services to homeless people, has partnered with CWG on the Opportunity Center. CWG develops affordable permanent supportive housing and provides services for those in need in the South Bay.

CWG and Abode have been working together for several years on their shared missions of rehousing formerly homeless people.

OPPORTUNITY CENTER
- Affordable apartment complex and service center for homeless people or very low-income families and individuals.
- 88 units.
- Common areas include an open reception area, large community room, small kitchen and dining space, computer lab, classroom, laundry room, and outdoor patio area.
- Houses two service centers: 1) One serving homeless and at-risk populations, and 2) One serving families, women with children, and homeless single women.
- Has a clinic operated by Peninsula HealthCare Connection, a CWG-supported nonprofit group that provides medical and psychiatric services for residents.
- Has a front desk staff, secure point of entry, and video security system.
- For more information, please contact Britney Kirkland – Abode Services Senior Director of Health and Wellness, Santa Clara County – at bkirkland@abodeservices.org.

Abode Services is one of the largest and most effective nonprofits working to end homelessness in the San Francisco Bay Area. Learn more at abodeservices.org.

Abode Services/Community Working Group Program in Palo Alto