Minimal Intervention/ Natural Wine Glossary

In the beginning, all wines were interference free. That was until 1847 when farming chemicals were introduced, and winemakers began using these additives during production. Wines made with more control came to the fore, and natural wines took a backseat.

The 1920s marked the birth of organic and bio dynamic wines when Rudolf Steiner introduced possibly the first organic farming system. In Australia, 2004 was a significant year when the First International Bio Dynamic Wine Forum was held in Beechworth, Victoria.

The natural wine movement – striving for zero interference – became again known over the past 10 to 15 years, and today is rapidly increasing in popularity. Some lo-fi wines are hard to distinguish as such, tasting and looking like more traditional counterparts. However, many minimal intervention styles do taste different, designed to harness the fruit's natural elements and the wine's terroir to reflect their place and purity. It's also not uncommon to discover sour, vigorous and spritzy qualities in these wines. When talking appearance, they can look cloudy or even dusty.

MI - Minimal Intervention/ Natural Wine

Wine that is fermented with its naturally occurring yeasts rather than controlling the process by adding commercial yeast or chemical additives. This process is also known as 'minimal intervention'. Natural wine is often made with grapes from sustainable, organic or bio dynamic vineyards. Generally made with little or no sulphites added. Grapes are typically grown by small-scale, independent producers.

S - Sustainable Practices

Wine made in an ecologically, economically and socially responsible way, often with organic or bio dynamic grapes.

VE - Vegan

When fining the wine, no fish or egg proteins have been used.

BD - Bio Dynamic Wine

Bio dynamic is similar to organic farming in that both take place without synthetic chemicals, but bio dynamic farming incorporates ideas about a vineyard as an entire ecosystem, and also takes into account things such as astrological influences and lunar cycles. A bio dynamic farm relies on the various phases of the moon, absorbing its pure and natural benefits. This is because during the time of a new and full moon, the pull effect can produce more water in soils, and this increased moisture encourages viticulture.

O - Organic Wine

Grapes are grown in accordance with the principles of organic farming. No chemicals can be used to facilitate grape growth that have an adverse effect on the environment or human health.

SC - Skin Contact

Each variety has a different flavour profile, which is shaped by removing or adding the components of the grapes – skins, stalks, seeds and juice. It's the varying amounts of time these elements are in the mix (skin contact) that produces the colourful hues of pink, purple and amber wines. Red wines all have skin contact while white wines do not. White wines left on skins longer produce orange wine.

We recommend Shobbrook Wines 'Giallo' 2018.

UFL - Unfiltered/ UF -Unfined

Fermentation leaves wine with a cloudy hue, caused by very fine particles. The conventional processes of fining (adding fish proteins, egg whites and clay) and filtering removes these particles for clarity – but they also remove flavour. Most natural wines simply skip this process.

MS - Minimal or No Sulphur Dioxide (Sulphites)

Sulphur dioxide is the main preserving agent in modern wine making. Natural wines only have small amounts of sulphur, if any.
