Let's Work Together

Crisis Text Line empowers journalists, researchers, policymakers, and anyone interested in using data to prevent future crises. We support communities across the nation to make more informed decisions around mental health. Please contact us about media requests, research opportunities, or partnership information.

Media and Policy: Ashley Womble, awomble@crisistextline.org

Research: Jackie Weiser, jweiser@crisistextline.org

Partnerships: Jana French, jfrench@crisistextline.org

Americans are struggling. We have all witnessed the steady increase in suicide rates (48,000 in 2018), fatal drug overdoses (67,000 in 2018), and the number of people with mental disorders (47 million). The bleak numbers tell us that people are in pain. Crisis Text Line knows why.

Crisis Text Line is a not-for-profit providing free crisis counseling via text, 24/7. Text CRISIS to 741741 to text with a trained Crisis Counselor. With over 129 million messages processed to date, we're growing quickly. And so is the need.

This report is designed to help you understand crisis in your state and in the United States as a whole. Information is power. This data—collected from our launch on August 1, 2013 until December 31, 2019—busts myths. It's the truth about the state of mental health and behavioral health in America.

“If it's a crisis to you, it's a crisis to us.”

Large. In the six years since Crisis Text Line launched the first national texting service for people in crisis, we have processed 129 million messages about the underlying causes—depression, anxiety, relationship issues—that can lead to tragic outcomes. This makes us one of the largest hotlines in America.

Best practice. Our vetted and trained Crisis Counselors work to move each texter from a hot moment to a cool calm. During these text conversations, Crisis Counselors are supported by our algorithms and work closely with Supervisors to deploy evidence-based best practices like active listening, collaborative problem-solving, and risk assessment techniques.

Private. Texting is a private, silent medium—not surprisingly, 68% of texters share something with us that they have never shared with another human being. And because they are sharing in a private, silent mode and opening up for the first time, the issues they share are often very dark, personal, and urgent.

High risk. Sometimes conversations are high risk for loss of life. In 28% of conversations, a texter mentions suicidal ideation. And 2-3 times each week, a texter mentions homicidal ideation—most often a school shooting or partner murder. When a texter shares suicidal or homicidal thoughts, we risk assess to determine if they have a plan, a method, and a timeframe to complete this threat to life. Most of the time, we're able to guide the texter through the creation of a plan to stay safe. However, in just under 1% of conversations, we cannot de-escalate or the person has already started an attempt. In these cases, we need to call emergency services to perform an active rescue. In just over six years, we have made 26,300 calls to 911.

Data rich. Since day one, we knew it was important to listen to the needs of Americans and to constantly improve our service based on their feedback. So, we collect, store, and analyze the data in real-time. Because we handle a plethora of issues—suicide, depression, sexual violence, substance abuse, eating disorders, anxiety, finances, and more—our data corpus has unique volume, velocity, and variety. It tells us who is texting (53% under age 17), race (30% are people of color), and sexual orientation (44% identify as LGBTQ), where they are texting from (we over-index in rural areas), the time of day they need help (late night), etc. We leverage the data to support academic research, policy, and public health.

OUR STORY

The idea for Crisis Text Line started when our founder Nancy Lublin was the CEO of DoSomething.org, the largest organization for young people and volunteerism in America. DoSomething.org communicates with over six million members by text. Some members started replying to messaging with personal challenges. One particularly desperate message inspired the need for Crisis Text Line: “He won’t stop raping me. Its my Dad. He told me not to tell anyone. RU there?”

Nancy quietly launched Crisis Text Line on August 1, 2013, in Chicago and El Paso—and within four months we were taking conversations from all 295 area codes in the US. Today, we’ve trained over 25,000 volunteer Crisis Counselors. We’ve exchanged 129 million messages in the US, including Washington DC. and Puerto Rico. And, in the past two years, we’ve made our service available to people in other countries including Canada, the UK, and Ireland.

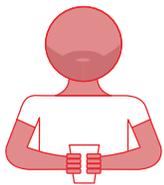

Millions of texters, an army of trained Crisis Counselors, and three countries later, we’ve taken a lead in the mental health space and have established ourselves at the forefront of machine learning for good. (We’re winners of the Google AI Impact Challenge).

HOW WE ARE FUNDED

We’re privately funded. This means we receive funding from foundations, individuals, and corporations. It’s important to us that a high-quality service is accessible to anyone who needs it, and that the data is all in one place. Money shouldn’t be a barrier to help.

WHAT HAPPENS WHEN YOU TEXT

Crisis Text Line was designed to help people in pain with as little friction as possible. It’s not an app. There is no long intake survey. There is no password or fee. We are available via SMS and Facebook Messenger—right in your pocket. Here’s what happens:

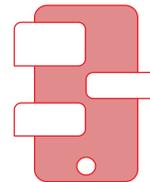

1. PERSON TEXTS 741741

2. AUTO RESPONSE

“Hi, this is Crisis Text Line. You’re not alone. By texting further with us, you agree to our Terms: goo.gl/EMCKCY. We can’t receive msgs >160 characters.”

“Resources and coping skills while we connect you: bit.ly/2BHZKBg. (STOP to cancel convo). What’s your crisis?”

3. CRISIS COUNSELOR

Exchange (average 40-60) messages to bring the texter from a hot to a cool moment, and create a plan for continued health and safety.

How It Works

THREE LEVELS OF CARE

When people in pain reach out to us, they deserve an empathetic human response. We leverage technology and data to make our human service faster and better.

EVERY TEXTER IS TRIAGED AT THREE LEVELS

1. ALGORITHM

2. CRISIS COUNSELORS

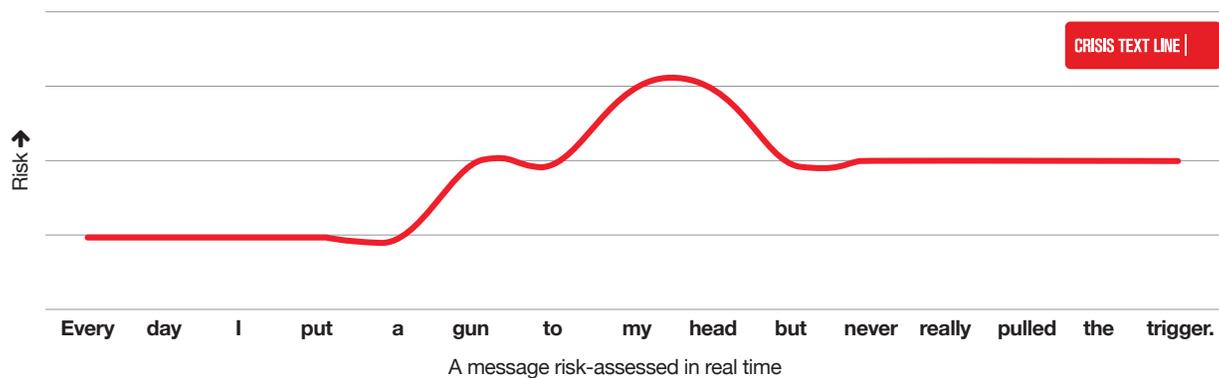

3. SUPERVISORS

ALGORITHM

Ranking the queue

We believe texters should be handled in order of severity, not chronology. When someone texts in “I want to die,” they deserve fast attention. Our algorithm codes high-risk conversations orange and makes them #1 in the queue.

Our machine learning triage model allows us to maintain low wait-times for high-risk texters, even in massive spike times. On average, our model makes it possible for us to serve 94% of high-risk texters in under five minutes. For example, during Election Night 2016, we experienced four times our volume for 48 hours, yet our average wait-time for high-risk texters was still only 39 seconds.

CRISIS COUNSELORS

During their conversations with texters, Crisis Counselors aim to help texters to come up with a safety plan. Sixty-eight percent of texters agreed on a plan and 99% of these texters say they intend to follow through on that plan.

Crisis Counselors work remotely—anywhere with a computer and secure internet connection works. Each volunteer Crisis Counselor must be over age 18, pass a background check, and complete 30 hours of training. Our training teaches skills in active listening and collaborative problem-solving. This course has been designed based on the data, evidence-based best practices, and the advice of a team of expert advisors. Because we aim for a high level of support, fewer than 30% of people make it through our application, background check, and training.

SUPERVISORS

We maintain a clinical team whose members watch every conversation in real-time. These Supervisors are always on our platform to support Crisis Counselors and create a strong experience for each texter. It is these Supervisors who determine if an active rescue is necessary and make the call to 911.

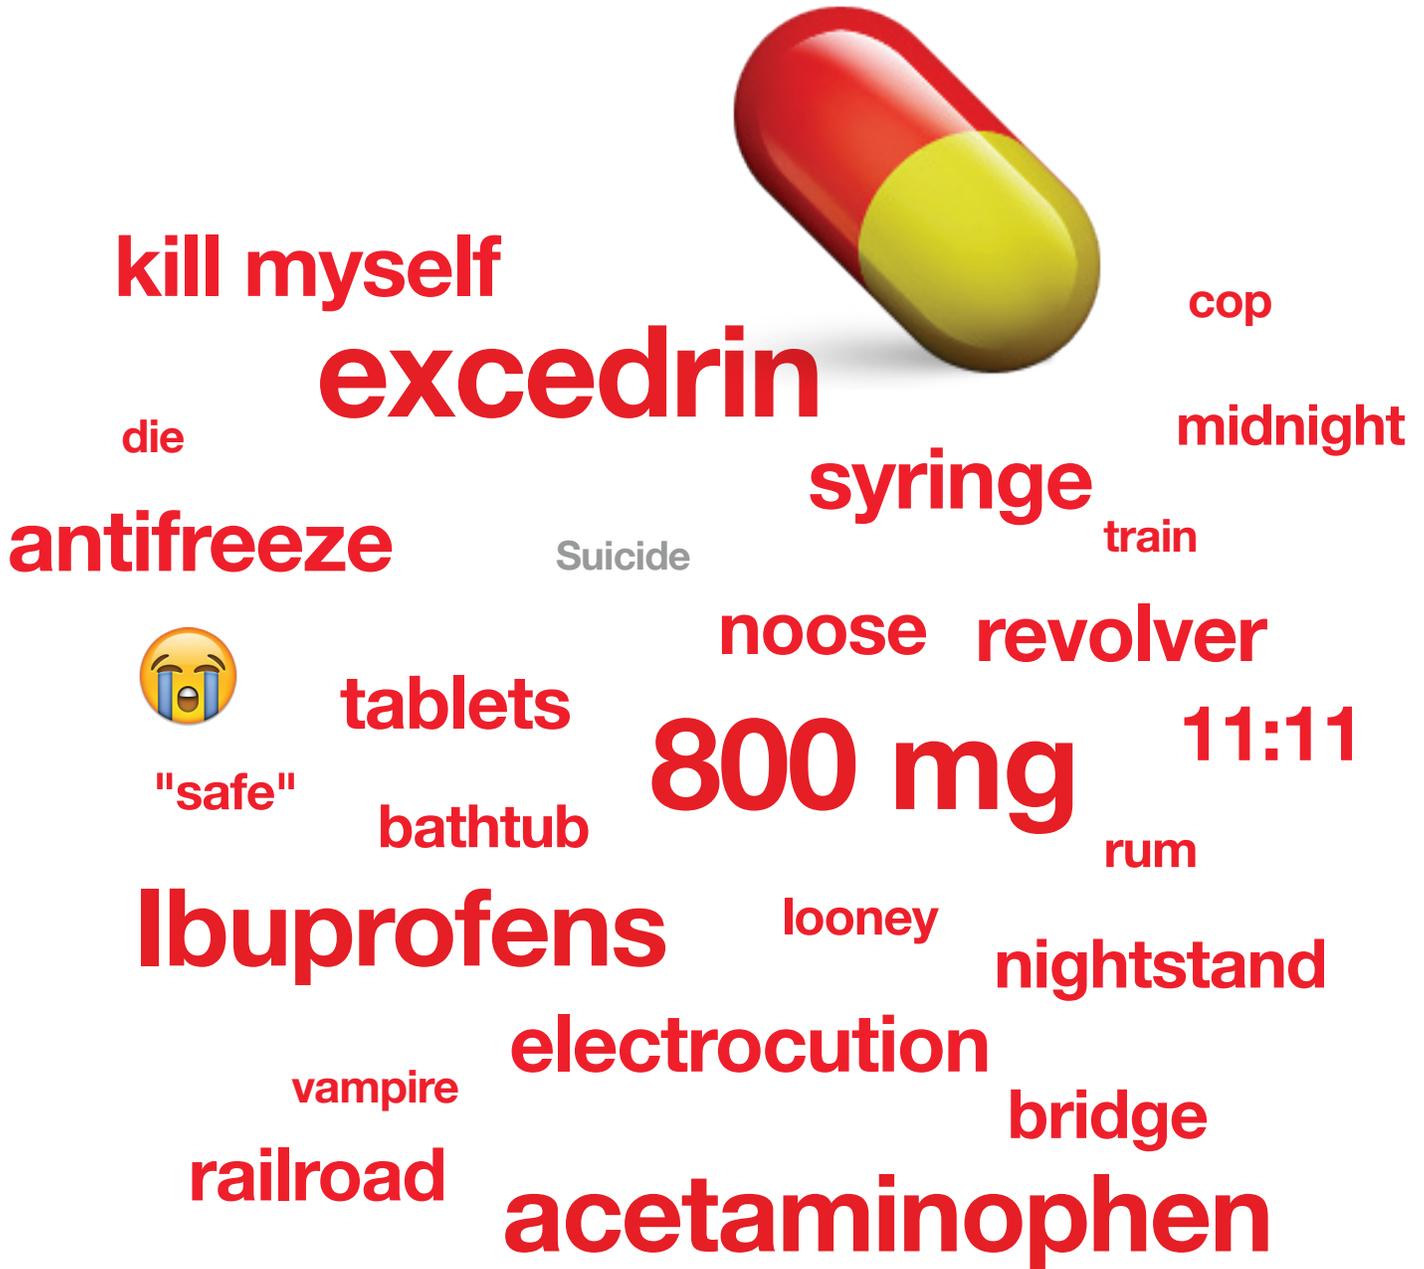

Self-Care That Works

What are the most effective self-care methods and coping skills in bringing texters “from hot to cool?” Here is what we see in the data:

- Talking to someone like a parent, friend, counselor, therapist, or trusted adult. For some people this might mean sending a text, picking up the phone, or seeing someone in person. Regardless, we know human connections are critical to fighting crisis.
- Music. This can be listening to music or making music of their own! The top artists mentioned by texters include: Twenty One Pilots, Shawn Mendes, and Demi Lovato.
- Writing. Texters who talk about writing as a coping skill are 7% more likely than others to indicate that their crisis feels less severe after talking with a Crisis Counselor. The most common form of writing mentioned by texters is a “letter.”
- Sleep. About 25% of conversations mention sleep (peaking in January and February). This is consistent across all demographics, especially during late night convos.

WORDS THAT HURT

Thanks to our texter triage algorithm, we learned that many words are more likely to lead to high-risk conversations than “suicide.” In the world cloud below, these words and numbers are sized in accordance the likelihood that the conversation will end in an active rescue. The emoji pill is 4.4 times more likely and crying face emoji is 1.6 times more likely to end in an life-threatening situation.

MESSAGES

The total number of messages sent to a texter or from a Crisis Counselor in the US.

SUICIDAL DE-ESCALATION

This number represents the conversations in which the texter indicated that they had suicidal thoughts, plan, method, and a timeframe to attempt suicide at some point in their conversation and agreed to a safety plan with the help of a Crisis Counselor.

ACTIVE RESCUES

Ideally, we are able to form a plan to keep the texter safe without needing to dispatch emergency services. In cases when the texter indicates that they have suicidal thoughts, plan, method, and a timeframe to attempt suicide, we contact emergency services.

SATISFACTION RATING

The average rating our texters give us at the end of a conversation.

FIRST-TIME ACCESSING CARE

For 37% of texters, Crisis Text Line was the first time they've ever reached out for support. This number represents the percentage of texters who say they have shared something in that conversation that they have never shared with another human.

All data is from our launch August 1, 2013 to December 31, 2019.

We believe that the information exchanged in our messages, the pace of those messages, the time of day, and the word choices can help unlock the secrets to better mental health.

By implementing data science and machine learning from day one, we have created the largest mental health data set in the world. Unlike other large-scale datasets on mental health and crisis, our data has incredible volume, velocity, and variety. We're one of the few datasets with an integrated problem-solution, where each conversation can be treated as an experiment in reducing crisis.

We use this data internally to make our service smarter and faster to help Crisis Counselors focus on doing what they do best: talking to texters in crisis. We share aggregated and anonymized data on www.crisistrends.org, which is updated daily.

HOW WE COLLECT DATA

Our terms of service are simple: When texters choose to message us to use our service, we may automatically receive and collect the phone number they texted us from and their mobile service provider.

Other than that, the only Personally Identifiable Information that we collect is the stuff texters voluntarily provide to us. Some of the types of Personally Identifiable Information that we may request that texters disclose may include their name, age, address, and zip code, particularly if necessary to respond to an imminent risk of death or serious bodily harm, or to make a mandatory report concerning suspected child abuse or neglect.

Additionally, if texters choose to take a survey on Crisistextline.org or via a link sent following a conversation, we may ask about the texter's experience in that conversation. The texter can totally choose to keep responses anonymous. It's their call.

PRIVACY

When we launched in the US, we looked at privacy standards around the world and adopted the Irish guidelines—the strictest in the world at the time. We are GDPR compliant, reviewed by Infoway in Canada, and remain user-first in our approach to privacy.

PUBLISHED RESEARCH

We have created a research fellowship for world-class machine learning and artificial intelligence researchers. They are working with one of the country's most important data sets to create a consistent flow of insightful research and data science products that Crisis Text Line uses to improve the crisis space as a whole. To date, nine papers have been published in leading academic journals. Learn more at www.crisistextline.org/open-data-collaborations.

Stigma is one of the largest barriers to getting support. For 37% of texters, texting Crisis Text Line is the first time they've ever reached out for support. And 68% of texters say they have shared something that they have never shared with another human.

We reach the people most in need of support and the least likely to have access to it. The demographic data stems from the 20% of conversations for which texters complete the survey and has been validated as representative of the larger population. Our texters are:

Young. 75% of our texters are under 25 years old. And a whopping 12% are under age 13.

Poor. 10% of the lowest income zip codes account for 19% of our volume.

Rural. 7.5% of USA counties are considered rural—and they account for 9.8% of our volume.

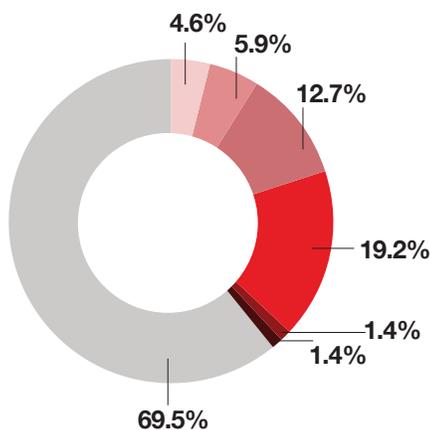

People of color. 19% of texters identify as Hispanic; 13% Black; 5.5% Native American.

LGBTQ+. 44% of our texters identify as LGBTQ+.

Ohio Mental Health & Addiction Services

PROBLEM

Ohioans—particularly teens— needed crisis help, but didn't want to talk over the phone. They wanted a more discrete way to get help. The Ohio Department of Mental Health and Addiction Services decided to give Crisis Text Line a try with the keyword 4HOPE. They started by putting tear-off posters in the back of bathroom stall doors in schools across the state to reach students (when they're a captive audience). Thanks to their partner dashboard, they could see how often people were texting their keyword. They noticed that over the summer, fewer people were texting in. To remind students that they could text 741741 year round, they played a PSA in movie theatres across the state. Over the years, strategies for spreading the word have also included ads on public transportation, school backpack tags, pharmacy prescription bags, and local restaurant takeout boxes; radio and social media campaigns; and handing out promotional materials like pens, keychains, and phone wallets at community events. Since the partnership began in May 2016, Crisis Text Line has helped over 12,900 Ohioans in crisis.

WHAT'S NEXT

- Recognizing Crisis Text Line as an evidence-based practice in state registries
- Establishing protocol for Active Rescues with local first responders
- Diversifying data by reaching people of different races and ages
- New partnership with Ohio Department of Rehabilitation and Correction will spread information about Crisis Text Line to prison and parole staff, inmates, and individuals on parole.

“We have been able to reach many Ohioans, particularly young Ohioans, who are in crisis. The team at Crisis Text Line worked closely with us to create our Data Dashboard which allows us to identify trends and share data with our state and local partners. We are always brainstorming new ways to promote our 4HOPE Keyword and let the many diverse communities across our state know that there is a free, confidential way to reach out for help.” — Laura Payne, Researcher in Bureau of Children, Youth and Families at Ohio Department of Mental Health and Addiction Services

Wisconsin Center for Suicide Awareness

PROBLEM

Wisconsin provided part-time crisis services via text through a service called Hopeline. From 3 p.m. to 10 p.m. Monday-Friday, the staff at the Center for Suicide Awareness answered all texts in addition to training all of the volunteers, marketing the line, and keeping everything else up and running. Partnering with Crisis Text Line under the keyword HOPELINE allowed the Wisconsin-based staff to focus on spreading awareness of the line and recruiting volunteers. The partnership expanded service to 24/7 support. Since the partnership started in May 2015, Crisis Text Line has helped over 6,200 Wisconsinites.

“We know that to prevent suicide we need to meet people where they are most comfortable and safe. What better way then to utilize text-based resources. The partnership with Crisis Text Line has allowed us to prevent suicide at the ground level.”

— Barb Bigalke, Executive Director of Center for Suicide Awareness

TEXTER FEEDBACK

A post-conversation survey asks texters if they want to share a message with their Crisis Counselor. These messages often confirm the impact the Crisis Counselor had on a texter's life.

DEMOGRAPHIC INFORMATION

The demographic data stems from the 20% of conversations for which texters complete the survey. This data is representative of the larger population and has been validated by an "imputation" project, led by external research partners at Northwestern University.

Thank you. I've been having a constant panic attack for a week, but I'm about to go to bed yawning for the first time in a while. The tension is lifted a bit and I can just let tears go without sobbing. Thank you for letting me talk it out.

Just being able to talk/vent to someone was great. But what was the best was giving me actual strategies to help me calm down. At one point I actually laughed out loud and that was the best. It truly made me feel better.
