From 1975 to 2009, the Business Hall of Fame inducted 247 laureates. Some were founders of successful companies; others were CEOs, publishers, or firsts in their fields.

All served as role models for JA students.

In the ten years since our last induction, both JA and the landscape of business have evolved. So, too, has the Global Business Hall of Fame. Our new laureates will be more reflective of our global reach, of the makeup of JA students, and of the business world today, including a commitment to select women as half of our laureates, as well as ensuring more representation from countries around the world and from diverse industries.

The Global Business Hall of Fame focuses on business as a global force for good, prioritizing nominees who are working toward the Global Goals for Sustainable Development, or SDGs.
