NEW PLAY DEVELOPMENT AT MOSAIC
In addition to our main stage productions, Mosaic continues to enrich the arts landscape of Washington, DC and the theater canon through Catalyst Series new play workshops, Trish Vradenburg New Play Commissions for women, and community engagement events like the H Street Oral History Project Festival, that invite new audiences into the magic of live theater.

Join us June 13-June 15, 2024 for the Reflections on Home Festival
A reading of the new play A Wake At Singh’s by Aeneas Hemphill, Mexodus performances, a storytelling event with KAMA DC, and a discussion with alumnae of the Dream Project.
There is nothing more magical than witnessing the creative courage of playwrights in action. To have an idea ignite their imagination, boldly write it down, and then share it with collaborators and eventually an audience is such an act of strength and vulnerability, and I remain in awe of writers who take that leap of faith. Rhiana Yazzie is one of those dynamic artists and it has been an honor having her in residence here at Mosaic. When I first encountered Nancy, I was struck by Rhiana’s funny and fantastical writing, the nuance and heart of the characters, the thrill of politics, and the opportunity to shine a spotlight on the resilience of Native Americans throughout history. It has been a joy working with Rhiana and the talented and generous director Ken-Matt Martin on this world premiere production. A special thanks to our Artistic Producer and Dramaturg Chelsea Radigan for her remarkable leadership throughout this process and for working so diligently to make Mosaic a welcoming home for our local and national artistic community.

Following Nancy will be the world premiere of Mexodus, a brilliant new musical that sheds light on the Underground Railroad that went south to Mexico and celebrates the power of solidarity. In Mexodus, the writers and performers, Brian Quijada and Nygel D. Robinson, play nearly 20 instruments perfectly, act, rap, and sing in both English and Spanish, and then live loop the score into being before your eyes. All in 90 minutes. You have truly never seen anything like it and will not want to miss it!

New plays and the courageous artists who make them will continue to be the centerpiece of Mosaic Theater as we celebrate our 10th Anniversary Season next year. I can’t wait to share the work of more innovative artists with you in the year ahead, including the Mosaic debut of award-winning writer Erika Dickerson-Despenza, the latest work from our new Trish Vradenburg Commissioned artist - DC superstar Paige Hernandez, and a devised piece created in collaboration with Georgetown University’s Laboratory for Global Performance and Politics. Here’s to another milestone season of Mosaic Magic!

MEET THE PLAYWRIGHT

Rhiana Yazzie (Playwright) is a 2021 Lanford Wilson and 2020 Steinberg Award-winning playwright, a director, a filmmaker, and the Artistic Director of New Native Theatre (2023 Bush Prize Award for social justice impact), which she started in 2009 as a response to the lack of connection and professional opportunities between Twin Cities theaters and the Native community. She’s a Navajo Nation citizen whose clans are Ta’neeszhii bashishchiin dóó Táchii’nii dashinalí. She has a co-commissioned play, Like the Polar Bear Mom, in the works with Long Wharf Theatre and Rattlestick Theater. Her play The Other Children of the Sun will premiere at the Kennedy Center next January, and she is currently writing plays for Solas Nua & Ireland’s Fishamble theaters, and the University of New Mexico. Nancy is a sequel to Queen Cleopatre and Princess Pocahontas (commissioned by Oregon Shakespeare Festival and The Public Theater). It is on this year’s Kilroy’s List and is also a recipient of a Venturous Theater Award. Rhiana directed the US Premiere of the opera Missing, a story about a missing and murdered Indigenous woman, at the Anchorage Opera in 2023. Her first feature film, A Winter Love, (writer/director/producer/actor) is currently playing in film festivals globally, and she is working on her second feature film, Wounspe Wankatya: A College Education, a project in pre production that was invited to the 2021 Sundance Producers Summit and won a Jerome Foundation Production grant. In her spare time, Rhiana writes for AMC’s Dark Winds.

"With Nancy, my goal was to tell an unexpected American story that gave us insight into historical figures while also giving all of us, Native and non-Native, the opportunity to feel the joys and devastations and comedy of a woman from a community we can fall in love with not just because we feel sorrow or joy for her, but because we genuinely see ourselves inside her beautiful and unique journey."

—Rhiana Yazzie

An Interview with our Company Elder

Rose Powhatan

What do you see as the role of the Elder for this production?
As an Indigenous artist/activist Elder descended from the Pamunkey/Tauxenent Tribes native to the local DMV area, I feel honored to be the Elder for Mosaic Theater’s production of Nancy. I found my role of the Elder of the production to be mutually beneficial to Mosaic’s staff, cast members and myself, since I’m a seasoned “wisdom keeper”, as well as an activist/advocate for the arts, social justice, voting rights, and both local and global community Indigenous and gender rights. Having lived through the tumultuous times of the 60’s, 70’s and 80’s, when social justice and equity issues were being brought to light and to the forefront of including disenfranchised Americans into the government’s framework for acquiring the “American Dream”, I had firsthand experiences with featured characters in Nancy.

What would you like audiences to take away from their experience of seeing Nancy?
It’s my sincere hope that audiences attending Nancy will be able to look beneath the surface of the play’s entertaining satire and understand how the actors’ roles bear witness to the ongoing struggle for equitable Indigenous “living rights” and social justice. Although the historic social problems depicted in Nancy took place during the presidency of Ronald Reagan, the economic, health and environmental issues at the heart of the play are still current in today’s world—only they seem to be accelerating.

There’s a saying that “one laughs to keep from crying”. Seeing Nancy evokes the same reaction.

Anything else you’d like to share?
The “Universe” really reached out to me by my being asked to be the Elder for Nancy. Who knew? My maternal ancestor was Pamunkey Chief Opechancanough, the uncle of Pocahontas. I was a social justice activist whose maternal grandmother Margaret Mills once wrote a complaint letter to First Lady Eleanor Roosevelt, who responded with help. My paternal cousin Bernie Boston frequently took official photos of the Reagans when they were in the White House. I knew “Iron Eyes” Cody. I interacted with “Princess” Pale Moon Rose, and own a necklace and shawl that formerly belonged to her. My late uncle Joseph Mills once had a carpentry shop behind the Atlas Theater. My grandsons call me “Nali Rose” (which means “my father’s mother”) because their Navajo mother is from the same tribe and state as Rhiana Yazzie, the playwright of Nancy!

LAND ACKNOWLEDGEMENT:
The Atlas Performing Arts Center stands on the traditional land of the Nacotchtank people and neighbors the ancestral lands of the Piscataway and Pamunkey peoples. This acknowledgment is in tribute to those peoples, past and present.
Rose Powhatan is a Native American artist, author and cultural activist. She is descended from both the Pamunkey and Tauxenent tribal nations of the historic Powhatan Paramountcy, which extended from Virginia to Washington, DC. Powhatan was born in Washington, DC, its northernmost territory. Powhatan grew up in an extended family of 29 arts practitioners. She was greatly influenced by her mother, artist Georgia Mills Jessup (Contemporary Collection, National Museum of Women in the Arts). Powhatan was an art major at McKinley Senior High School in Washington, DC. She later attended Howard University, where she won awards in painting, and earned both her BFA cum laude and MA degrees; graduate studies continued at Catholic University, Georgetown University and Trinity University; and both the Shakespeare Institute and the University of London, in the United Kingdom. She is also a Cafritz Foundation and Fulbright Scholar fellow. Powhatan’s artwork has been exhibited locally, nationally and internationally at museums, galleries and US embassies. She is a published author on historic Indigenous topics and has written plays staged for young audiences. As an activist, Powhatan participated in civil rights activities; was Secretary of the National Underground Railroad Advisory Committee; organized voter registration; worked for Maryland state recognition of local tribes; was an elder in the Intertribal Women’s Circle; and served on numerous other boards. Rose Powhatan and her husband Michael Auld (Taino) co-founded the Powhatan Intertribal Museum to promote and preserve the history and presence of Indigenous people. Powhatan gave the first Land Acknowledgement for the 2019 opening of the Kennedy Center’s REACH and shared Eastern Woodlands stories at its “Indigenous Day”. As an inaugural member of the Culture Caucus, Powhatan curated both 2021 and 2022 Millennium Stage Summer Festivals.

A World Premiere Co-Production with Baltimore Center Stage

History meets hip-hop in this groundbreaking theatrical experience that explores the often-untold stories of enslaved people in the United States who sought freedom in Mexico, rather than looking north. Brian Quijada and Nygel D. Robinson use live-looping to create a musical in real time, telling a unique story of the Underground Railroad that led south, highlighting the power of Black and Brown unity.

"If you loved Hamilton... get ready for the world premiere of a brand new musical"
