Charismatic and a polished public speaker, LDS President David O. McKay instilled devotion in church members around the globe. An avowed optimist, he maintained a lifelong “faith in mankind; they are God’s children.” His desire to share the Mormon gospel coincided with a deep need to protect the church from outside social pressures, leading him to adopt a nuanced yet politically conservative public image.

Though his genial personality aided him in unifying church leadership, McKay’s dislike of interpersonal conflict allowed strong-willed colleagues to sometimes overshadow him. He personally disagreed with apostle Ezra Taft Benson’s advocacy for the right-wing John Birch Society, yet permitted Benson and others to promote a conservative political agenda in religious settings.

Similar hesitancy existed in McKay’s failure to lift the priesthood and temple ban against African-American Mormons. Governing during the height of the Civil Rights movement, he never fully reconciled his belief in human spiritual equality with the racism of his era.

The voice of his dedicated secretary, Clare Middlemiss, often guides the diary’s narratives, revealing not only the personal musings of the church prophet but tracking the development of the modern LDS Church as a social, political, and economic entity.

Harvard S. Heath is former curator of the Utah and American West Archives at the Harold B. Lee Library, Brigham Young University, where he earned his PhD. He is the editor of In the World: The Diaries of Reed Smoot and a contributor to the modern edition of James E. Talmage’s 1911 House of the Lord: A Study of Holy Sanctuaries Ancient and Modern. He was also a lead researcher for BYU President Ernest L. Wilkinson’s four-volume Brigham Young University: The First One Hundred Years.
Rachel O’Brien Rockwood, like her stepfather J. D., longs to hunt criminals and other miscreants. So when, in 1887, during the height of US anti-polygamy legislation, two federal deputies on the lookout for Mormon polygamists are murdered in the small village of Centre, west of Salt Lake City, she jumps at the chance to join the investigation. But detecting never runs smoothly—Rachel and J. D. butt heads regularly over method and approach. Rachel favors talking and uncovering motives. J. D. prefers tracking and searching for the murder weapon. Also there are too many suspects—nearly every villager wanted the deputies gone. As fast as J. D. and Rachel can uncover clues, the local Mormon bishop brushes them aside, insisting instead that the deputies committed thievery and fled westward. Whose theory is true—Rachel’s, J. D.’s, the bishop’s? Or will the story be shaped by the federal marshal, openly hostile to all things Mormon?

John Bennion is a six-generation native of Utah’s western desert. He is associate professor of English at Brigham Young University, where he teaches creative writing and British literature. He is the author of Breeding Leah (1991) and Falling Toward Heaven (2000). He has published short work in AWP Chronicle, Best of the West II, Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, English Journal, High Country News, Hotel Amerika, Journal of Mormon History, Southwest Review, Utah Historical Quarterly, and elsewhere. He lives in Utah Valley with his wife, a psychotherapist. They are the parents of five children.

Discovering Us brings our shared history to life and tells the stories behind fifty of the most important human origins discoveries ever made. Illustrated with stunning full-color photographs, this book celebrates science, exploration, and the search for what it means to be human.

The Leakey Foundation is a non-profit organization formed in 1968 to fund human origins research and to share discoveries. Since then, the foundation has awarded more than 2,500 grants for research in 110 countries. Discovering Us highlights the thrilling fossil finds, groundbreaking primate behavior observations, and important scientific work of Leakey Foundation researchers.

From the tempestuous fight for statehood to the evolution of Utah voters from Democrats to Republicans, Rod Decker analyzes the intersection of politics and faith in the complex political culture of modern Utah. Beginning with the state’s roots as a communal theocracy, Utah Politics deftly examines how Mormon morality influenced and continues to shape conflicts at both the local and federal level.

Whether determining the role nuclear fallout played in causing cancer epidemics throughout the state or the influence of LDS lobbyists, Decker demonstrates how the rose that blossomed in the desert was sometimes fertilized by conspiracy, debate, and political machination.

Some themes recur: governors become popular by fighting federal oversight—signaling a lingering distrust that Washington could alter the LDS way of life—and liberals use the court system to circumvent conservative legislatures who see public morality as a defining feature of government. Through this lens, issues both deceptively innocuous and deeply complex underscore Utah’s continuing dance with religious freedom and civil liberty.

Known for his reporting on Utah’s KUTV Channel 2, as well as for his column and editorials in the Deseret News, Rod Decker understands the complexity of Utah culture, politics, and faith like few others. A graduate of the University of Utah, Decker attended graduate school at the University of Chicago and spent a year at Harvard as a Nieman Fellow before enlisting as a military intelligence officer during the Vietnam War. His first book, An Environment for Murder, turned his intimate acquaintance with sagebrush politics into a page-turning mystery.
Beginning in the spring of 1969, Huckleberry Finn inspired a question: Could you build a raft, float down the Mississippi River to New Orleans, and on the way learn something about America and its peoples? Will Bagley, a vagrant longhair and future prize-winning western historian, and his friends could, and did. Now, a half century after the adventure, Bagley tells his story.

Excerpt:

“Below St. Louis the liberated river deepened, narrowed, and picked up speed. As it surged southward, it became less populated and poorer. The towns were fewer, funkier, and farther apart: we saw river walls and dying main streets and heard soft rural Missouri accents. At night we sought protection behind towheads or in chutes, a foot above the rushing water, dreaming about rivers only to wake up and drift all day down the immense and mysterious river. We drew closer to the weather and nature and ourselves every day. We saw an America we hadn’t known existed.”

Will Bagley has a degree in history from the University of California at Santa Cruz (1971). Following several jobs, Bagley turned to history full time in 1995. He has since become the author or editor of twenty-plus books, including Blood of the Prophets: Brigham Young and the Mountain Meadows Massacre. For his historical studies, he has received awards from the Mormon History Association, the Utah Arts Council, the John Whitmer Historical Association, the Western Writers of America, and Westerners International, among others. He is the series editor of Kingdom in the West: The Mormons and the American Frontier. In 2014, he was named a lifetime Fellow of the Utah State Historical Society. He resides in Salt Lake City.
Utah’s quest for statehood lasted longer, involved more political intrigue, and garnered more national attention than any other US territory. While Utahns—especially the Mormon population—hoped statehood would grant them increased political autonomy, the several decades of refusal by LDS Church leadership to denounce polygamy stalled even the most carefully executed political schemes.

Even without the albatross of polygamy, the territory presented a unique set of challenges. Lingering distrust toward the federal government blurred the lines separating church and state. LDS leaders considered themselves anointed by God to lead the government. Officials sent from Washington to dilute LDS control found themselves in hostile, dangerous terrain.

Aware of the complexity of this fifty-year struggle, historian Edward Leo Lyman carefully traces the key figures, events, and cultural shifts leading to Utah’s admission to the Union. Utilizing an abundance of careful research, Finally Statehood! is a definitive attempt to understand the state’s history on both a local and national level, with each political roadblock, religious conflict, and earnest attempt at compromise meticulously examined under the vantage of time.

Edward Leo Lyman is a professor of history at Dixie State University in St. George, Utah, and formerly at California Polytechnic University and California State University San Bernardino. He is the author of The Arduous Journey: Salt Lake to Los Angeles; A History of Millard County, Utah; Political Deliverance: The Mormon Quest for Utah Statehood; and San Bernardino: The Rise and Fall of a California Community. He has had articles published in Arizona and the West, Brigham Young University Studies, California History, Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Idaho Yesterdays, Southern California Quarterly, and the Utah Historical Quarterly.
Leonard J. Arrington was the foremost LDS historian of the twentieth century. He authored hundreds of articles and books, including the path-breaking Great Basin Kingdom and Brigham Young: American Moses. During the 1970s, he served as the first academically trained official historian of the LDS Church and is widely recognized as the father of the New Mormon History. At the time of his death in 1999, he had completed his final work, a celebration of faith and intellect in the lives of Latter-day Saints, here published for the first time.

Excerpt:

“These essays are written in the historical tradition of exemplary lives. I try to give a vision of greatness in both intellect and faith among selected LDS leaders. The men and women described are human beings, with observable imperfections, but they exhibited, I believe, intellectual vitality, spiritual power, and moral courage, and appealed to ‘the better angels of our nature.’ God’s spirit shone through their writings and actions.”

Leonard J. Arrington served as the first-ever academically credentialed Church Historian of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints from 1972 to 1982. Among his many books are Great Basin Kingdom: An Economic History of the Latter-day Saints (1958) and Brigham Young: American Moses (1985), which won the Evans Biography Award. He is co-author with Davis Bitton of The Mormon Experience: A History of the Latter-day Saints (1979). Arrington is the recipient of awards from the Mormon History Association and the Western History Association and taught at North Carolina State University, University of California at Los Angeles, Utah State University, and Brigham Young University. During his tenure at BYU, he was Lemuel Redd Professor of Western History and also director of the Joseph Fielding Smith Institute for Church History.
Examining Brigham Young’s legacy requires an understanding of his secular ambition and religious zeal. A formidable leader in both his church and country, Young’s abilities coincided with the colonizing zeitgeist of nineteenth-century America.

By 1877, some 400 Mormon settlements spanned the western frontier from Salt Lake City to outposts in Idaho, Nevada, Arizona, Wyoming, and California. As prophet of the LDS Church and governor of the proposed State of Deseret, Young led several campaigns for Utah statehood while defending polygamy and local sovereignty. His skillful and authoritarian leadership led historian Bernard de Voto to classify him as an “American genius,” responsible for turning Joseph Smith’s visions “into the seed of life.”

Young’s diaries and office journals reveal a man dedicated to his church, defensive of his spiritual and temporal claims to authority, and determined to create a modern Zion within the Utah desert. Editor George D. Smith’s careful organization and annotation of Young’s personal writings provide insights into the mind of Mormonism’s dynamic church leader and frontier statesman.
The Ancient Order of Things

Christian Larsen, editor

The ground-breaking essays featured here include:

“The Anointed Quorum in Nauvoo, 1842–45,” by Devery S. Anderson

“So We Built a Good Little Temple to Worship In”: Mormonism on the Pedernales–Texas, 1847–51,” by Melvin C. Johnson

“Black Saviors on Mount Zion: Proxy Baptisms and Latter-day Saints of African Descent,” by Tonya Reiter

“Not to Be Riten’: The Mormon Temple Rite as Oral Canon,” by Kathleen Flake

Christian Larsen holds a master’s degree in publishing from George Washington University and a bachelor’s degree in history from the University of Utah. A student of Mormon history, he is currently working on an edition of the diaries of LDS Church general authority Charles W. Penrose.
Salt Lake School of the Prophets, 1867–1883
Devery S. Anderson, ed.
“Devery S. Anderson’s presentation of the minutes of the Salt Lake City School of the Prophets offers significant insight into what mattered most to mid-nineteenth-century Mormon leaders. In what they called their ‘theological class,’ they discussed the nature of God, polygamy, dietary issues, politics, and economics. The transcript and annotation provide enlightenment on all of these issues.” —Thomas G. Alexander, author of Mormonism in Transition

Caldera Ridge
Jack Harrell
“From its seeming bucolic, benign beginnings, Caldera Ridge ambles upward carefully and cautiously toward a shattering summit crossroads, where what at first seemed a story about loss and learning collides unexpectedly with a brutal revelation about past, perception, and personal tragedy. Harrell’s latest capably propounds that we can’t know all the answers when we don’t know all the questions.” —Coke Newell, author of On the Road to Heaven

William Bickerton Forgotten Latter Day Prophet
Daniel P. Stone

“In this finely crafted and vividly executed biography, Daniel Stone has done far more than chronicle the life of a single individual or even of a single denomination. In Bickerton’s life, the author has discerned and explored crucial ideas about how religions work. As a historian of religion, I appreciate Stone’s deep commitment to the subject matter. His skill as a researcher and writer have coalesced in the production of one of the most important biographies ever to be written about any Latter Day Saint leader.” —Stephen C. “While these poems must have been written over the course of many years, they seem aware of their own lateness—of what has been lived and then lost, of what has been taken, and what has been relinquished. It is awash in memory, beautifully reconstituted, animated, revived. This is one of the things, I think, that Sharif means when she says that poetry is “a form of reading”—that is, it holds the text of the world and inspects it closely. Poetry can also give form to the ways we think and are in the world, and Sillitoe’s book.” —Lisa Orme Bickmore, Dialogue

As I sat in my office and read through the accounts of sorrow, hope, grief, and love, I was met by the comfort of forty-six individuals who offered their story as a guiding light for life’s journey. In the 1970s historian D. Michael Quinn began researching the social structure, breadth of influence, and operational procedures of the LDS leadership, including marriage patterns, use of force, and control of secular society. His thesis at the University of Utah and dissertation at Yale University were on the Mormon hierarchy as an “American elite.” Beginning in the early 1990s, he began publishing the long-sought-after results of his research, culminating now in volume 3 of this important series. He has published five other acclaimed books, but this series is unequivocally his life’s work and magnum opus.

“Some believers may not be pleased with the portrait Quinn paints, but his documentation is so thorough and indisputable that few will be able to challenge his arguments. Some chapters are case studies in the rise to leadership of particular individuals, most notably Ezra Taft Benson (13th president/prophet of the church and Eisenhower’s secretary of agriculture), and their employment of power. Other chapters look at the means by which power is exercised in governance. The biographical and chronological appendixes are worth the price of the book. Quinn, now an independent scholar, is unquestionably Mormonism’s leading historian. A magisterial study; recommended for all libraries with collections in American history.” — David S. Azzolina, Library Journal

The Nauvoo Endowment Companies, 1845–1846
edited by Devery S. Anderson and Gary James Bergera

“The two books edited by Devery S. Anderson and Gary James Bergera document in excruciating detail the efforts of Smith and his inner circle to establish the practice of the Mormon temple endowment. As documentary records that range far in reproducing primary source material on the subject, both works are of exceptional value. They open a window into the esoteric practices that emerged in Nauvoo in the 1840s and found their place in some strains of Mormonism following the death of the founding prophet.”—Roger D. Launius, Journal of Mormon History

The Development of LDS Temple Worship, 1846–2000
edited by Devery S. Anderson

“A welcome addition to the small but growing body of historical literature on a little-known subject in Mormonism. The beginnings of temple endowments … and their early developments under Joseph Smith and Brigham Young have tantalized observers both in and out of the church for years.”—Alma Blair, John Whitmer Historical Association Journal
