Pioneer

• Dookhee Gungah’s contribution to society spans various fields. He pioneered many a practices in education, religious and cultural activities that would later become mainstream. His accomplishments did not go unnoticed and was praised by many scholars of Hinduism and historians alike. He was a true visionary and pioneer.
Education

• Dookhee Gungah was not formally schooled yet, in the early 1900s, he personally ran dozens of schools across the island for the benefit of boys and girls, where subjects like Hindi, Sanskrit, Arithmetic and Geography were taught.

• In those days, neither the state schools nor the socio-cultural organisations had any formal syllabus to teach these subjects through a Hindi medium but Gungah was the first in Mauritius to introduce such a syllabus. It was circulated as a 14-page booklet to all his schools and was well structured for all classes from Standard I to VI.

• All expenses and running of the schools were borne by Gungah personally. These included the teachers’ and inspectors’ salaries, supplying textbooks and other materials, prizes and certificates awarded to the best students etc.

• Gungah also personally funded the Hindi Book Series to be used as textbooks in his schools. These books covered topics such as Indian history, Mauritian history, geography, cultural affairs, and various other topics. These books were known as the Dookhee Gungah Patmala.

• Gungah was addressed a letter dated 7th September 1925 from Natal (now Durban) in South Africa, praising his good deeds in the field of education and requesting more copies of his Hindi Book Series as they were the only Hindi textbooks they could get hold of other than from India. This level of recognition for a descendant of an indentured labourer was unheard of in those days, in particular given the context of the Indian community in South Africa following Gandhi’s visit to Natal.
Education – continued

- Kunwar Maharaj Singh was an Indian government delegate sent to Mauritius to inquire into the state of the Indian immigrants. He carried his investigation from 19th Dec 1924 to 31st Jan 1925. He visited a number of plantations and estates and met with several dignitaries as well as planters and labourers. He was a guest at the Narmadeshwar Temple, which Dookhee Gungah had built in Rose-Belle, in the south of Mauritius. He was also a chief guest at the temple’s school, again funded by Gungah, where he praised Gungah’s achievements and promotion of free education.

- The Savitri Girls School was set up in 1930 by Gungah so as to further reform women’s position in society. Gungah had always been about the emancipation of the womenfolk by providing them access to paid work in his estates, biscuit factories, bakeries, cattle farms, cottage industry, basket-making workshops, and so on, and by encouraging girls to attend school.

- On 23rd November 1978, the Dookhee Gungah Government School was inaugurated. This was in recognition for his contribution to the field of education. The plot of land where the school was built belonged to Gungah.

The first ever Hindi book published in Mauritius in 1923 was sponsored by Dookhee Gungah. The book is called Mauritius Ka Itihaas and was authored by Pundit Atmaram Vishwanath. It is of utmost historical importance.

Pundit Vishwanath penned a remarkable dedication to Dookhee Gungah, commending his unequalled contributions in the field of religion, education and social welfare.

A Hindi quarterly entitled Gungah was published in Benares, India, by Pundit Ramgovind Tiwari from 1927 to 1933 with the financial help of Dookhee Gungah.

Gungah himself published a Hindi book called Sadukti Sangraha in 1935 for the centenary celebration of the arrival of indentured immigrants from India. It is a collection of verses and wise sayings from various holy scriptures such as the Bhagavad Gita, Ramayana, Vedas, etc.
Mauritius Ka Itihaas was the first ever Hindi book published in 1923 in Mauritius by Pundit Vishwanath with the help of Dookhee Gungah, to whom the book was dedicated.

Dookhee Gungah built the Narmadeshwar Shivala in Rose Belle in 1900, the then largest Hindu temple in the south of Mauritius.

Shivaratree pilgrims were welcomed there with refreshments and a spacious hall to stay overnight, for those living in the villages in the south. To this day, the shivala serves its purpose and is a shining legacy of the dedication of Gungah to religious practices.

Gungah conducted all religious festivals with great zeal. He provided free kanwars and dhotis to all pilgrims from the sacred lake in Grand Bassin, Ganga talao.

He sent his workmen to clear the wooded paths leading to Ganga talao. These workmen were also sent to various households in the neighbouring villages to encourage the community to participate in weekly gatherings at the shivala and other religious festivals such as Mahashivaratree.

Gita and Ramayana sermons were held weekly at the shivala for the benefit of the community.

Satsangs were regularly held at his residence in the presence of several pundits.
Social

• Dookhee Gungah was a philanthropist par excellence for he funded several temples across the country for both the Hindi and non-Hindi speaking community.

• He donated lavishly to pundits and religious personalities who carried out ceremonies and discourses at his residence and at the shivala.

• He was likened to Raja Harischandra in that nobody left empty-handed after they came to him for help. Pundit Vishwanath said of Gungah: “His generosity is more valuable to us than his wealth.”

• Several plots of land in the neighbouring villages around New Grove were donated by Dookhee Gungah for the constructions of welfare centres and other socio-cultural institutions for the benefit and emancipation of the entire community.

Philanthropy

• While most stories about the indentured labourers revolve around their suffering and hardship, Gungah’s story is about the uprising of not just one individual or family but that of an entire nation, for he was the first to inspire, support and guide the leaders who came after him.

• He provided the oppressed Indo-Mauritian community with the means to better themselves, to find their new sense of identity, to be able to freely practice their religion, to have access to free education, to learn about their culture and traditions and to rally them as one people.

• His assets and property spanned across more than just land, like most other planters. He owned a bakery, barachois, biscuit factory, cattle farm, orchard, cottage industry, colonial houses, beach bungalows, gymnasium, boats, cars, lorries, horses, locomotives, weigh-bridges, jewellery, radio, gramophone, and several other possessions which were rare or unheard of within the Indo-Mauritian community. Many of these assets were not solely for the benefit of his family but for the betterment of the entire community.

• Gungah’s real wealth was in the construction of several temples, funding of religious ceremonies and festivals, schools, first textbooks of their kind, funding of political activists and helping his fellow Mauritians to rise as a nation.
Epitaph

The following is scribed on Dookhee Gungah’s tombstone:

How fortunate is the man
Whose life is spent in the spread of knowledge,
And whose path is that of virtue,
Whose conduct is free from selfishness and pride,
And whose sole aim is benevolence
For the happiness of suffering mankind
Conclusion

• The achievements of Dookhee Gungah are truly unique and unparalleled across the Indian diaspora of indentured immigrants.
• His vision for the betterment of humankind is exemplary and spans several domains of social life.
• His legacy is still alive and, even though it cannot be quantified, his contributions to society is of immense historical importance.
