TP2503: Philosophy of Religion – Dr. John Lee
Thursday, 8:05pm – 10pm; 3 credits
In Person/Online Option Available

DESCRIPTION: Philosophy of Religion examines questions that arise in the intersection of faith and reason. These questions have arisen in the history of the church, and these questions continue to demand our attention in our contemporary setting. The particular questions shift from context to context depending on changing thought patterns and worldviews. Some longstanding questions still relevant in our time include: questions of God’s existence, God’s attributes, the authority of special revelation, the problem of suffering and evil, rationality of religious belief, and the challenge religious pluralism. We will examine these questions among others.

SIGNIFICANCE FOR LIFE AND MINISTRY: More than ever, questions of a philosophical nature are being asked by people new to the Christian faith and by people in the pews. Pastors and leaders need perspectives and resources to address these questions that people are struggling with. To explain the reason for the hope that we have in Christ (1 Pet. 3:15) requires us to reflect deeply and come to biblical, theological, and philosophical understanding that’s helpful to others and ourselves.

LEARNING OUTCOMES: Through the successful completion of this course a student will be able to:
- Understand the core questions, issues, and perspectives within philosophy of religion.
- Articulate for oneself and for one’s community Christian responses to philosophically driven questions.
- Examine and write on a philosophical topic that engages one’s concern or interest.
