84.1 CORRESPONDENCE

Native American cosmology

- From David McGuiness (orientalist@webtv.net) 25 Feb 1999:

I am doing an extensive research project on comparative Asiatic cosmological systems. I myself an a trained Sumerologist with some additional work in East Asian linguistics. I would like to know if anyone could pass along some Native American words for 'circle' or 'sphere' or 'cycle', 'reptile' or 'air', 'cosmos' or 'heaven' or 'sky and earth'. Thank you so much for your help.

Mystery sentence

- From Michael Adkins (mahopa2000@hotmail.com) 28 Feb 1999:

I was told that the following sentence is from some Native American language, and that it means something like "living in harmony with nature". Can anyone tell me (1) what language it is, and (2) if this translation is accurate?

POMMAUCHSUWI MAJAWIECHEN NACHPI NAPCHPIKIN

Thanks for your help.

Seeking language preservation specialists

- From Jeff Allen (jeff@elda.fr) 23 Feb 1999:

I am aware of a new project in the US that could benefit from the participation of a linguist, ethnologist, or sociologist who has experience/knowledge in the area of language preservation. It would help if the person were familiar with electronic text and speech corpora techniques of data collection. The purpose of the project is to develop bi-/multi-lingual databases and systems (e.g., machine translation, speech translation) to preserve Alaskan languages. Some language-specific linguists are already involved. The project is now hoping to find specialists with a background in language preservation in order to form academic partnerships. Funding opportunities are currently being investigated.
There is also the possibility that specialists outside of the US could participate, aiming at international cooperation efforts.

Please get back to me directly on this if you are interested.

Stabilizing Indigenous Languages Conference (Tucson, AZ, June 3-5)

- From Karen Francis-Begay (kfbegay@u.arizona.edu) 25 Feb 1999:

"One Voice, Many Voices: Recreating Indigenous Language Communities"

The 6th annual Stabilizing Indigenous Languages Conference (SILC) will be held at the University of Arizona, Tucson, June 3-5, 1999, in conjunction with the 20th Annual American Indian Language Development Institute (AILDI). Participants have the option of attending only the Stabilizing Indigenous Languages Conference, or participating jointly in SILC and the American Indian Language Development Institute (AILDI). As part of their coursework, all AILDI participants will also participate in SILC.

The SILC is dedicated to promoting, preserving and protecting indigenous languages of the Americas. Participants learn more about language planning and programs of other communities, network with language professionals from around the world, and gain knowledge, skills, and hands-on materials to expand the circle of Native language speakers in their own community.

Participants include parents, teachers, teacher assistants, school administrators, and other academic professionals; policy makers; language revitalization advocates and activists; technology specialists; and tribal scholars, elders, and leaders in a recommitment to strengthening indigenous languages.

The focus of this year's conference is on strategies for recreating and strengthening the ties between speakers in the contexts of community, home and school. Please join us for information sharing, collaboration, networking and strategic planning by completing a call for proposal and/or a conference registration form.

WEBSITES OF INTEREST

Wayne Leman's site

Readers of the Bulletin who haven't visited SSILA-member Wayne Leman's website recently will probably be astounded by the amount of useful information he has brought together there. His Cheyenne page establishes a benchmark for thorough and reliable coverage of a Native American language, but he has posted much, much more. Included at the site are:

- An A-Z list of language pages for dozens of languages, some with links to resource materials for purchase, others with word lists, on-line language lessons, articles about languages and their history, and downloadable fonts.

- Links to scholarly articles about native languages and their preservation, books, conferences, and legislation.

- Links to teacher training and bilingual education sites, computer resources for Native Americans, and other linguistics and language learning sites.

- A page of Other Native American Resources with links to official and unofficial Tribal home pages.

List archiving

- From Jordan Lachler (lachler@unm.edu) 4 Mar 1999:

I'm arranging with the nice folks at the Linguist List to have the Athabaskan (Athlang-l) list archived on their site. If you want to see what they've done for some other lists, such as the Salishan list among others, take a look at:

http://www.linguistlist.org/list-archives.html

As time goes by, that will hopefully be a useful service for folks.

CARLA
From Suzanne Hay (carla@tc.umn.edu) 3 Mar 1999:

The Center for Advanced Research on Language Acquisition (CARLA) at the University of Minnesota is one of seven National Language Resource Centers (NLRC) funded by the U.S. Department of Education to improve the nation's capacity to teach and learn foreign languages effectively. In addition to NLRC-funded projects, CARLA supports a number of coordinated programs of research, training, development and dissemination of information relating to second language teaching and learning.

The CARLA website is filled with information about the research and action initiatives at CARLA and contains many resources for the language teaching community. The website features information on second language assessment, less commonly taught languages (LCTLs), technology and second language learning, immersion education, culture and language learning, second language learning strategies, and the articulation of language instruction. It also has information on CARLA's products and services including summer institutes, conferences and workshops, publications and presentations, CARLA working papers, and language proficiency assessments. CARLA's LCTL database lists the post-secondary institutions at which less commonly taught languages—including a number of Native American languages -- are taught in North America. It is the most popular component of the CARLA website and receives an average of 27,000 "hits" per month.

Come and visit our site:

The CARLA Update is a quarterly electronic newsletter designed to give second language teachers and researchers current information on the programs and projects currently operating under the auspices of CARLA. If you would like to be added to the list or if you would like more information about CARLA and its activities, please e-mail the center at <carla@tc.umn.edu>.
