When Emergency Situations Call for Difficult Decisions: AVMA's Guidelines for the Depopulation of Animals

Join us on Monday, March 25, for a free, one-hour webinar that previews the release of the first edition of the AVMA Guidelines for the Depopulation of Animals. Dr. Steven Leary, chair of the AVMA's Panels on Euthanasia, Humane Slaughter, and Depopulation, will provide an overview of this new guidance document and discuss why, during times of crisis or major catastrophe, depopulation of affected animals may sometimes be the most ethical and compassionate action to take.

You will learn about

- The difficult situations in which a depopulation decision may need to be made
- How depopulation differs from euthanasia and humane slaughter
- Why the AVMA's depopulation guidelines contain important information for veterinary professionals to have whether caring for companion, agricultural, laboratory, zoo, or wild animals.
- How depopulation balances protection of animal welfare with the need for rapid response and prevention of further devastation.

This webinar offers 1 hour of CE credit. Space is limited; reserve your seat today.

Patrick,

We are also trying to call you right now.

We have an issue with the VSD section of the Swine Chapter. There is a statement in the section stating that VSD should only be used as a last resort. If that is the case then VSD should be listed as Not Recommended instead of Permitted in Constrained Circumstances. In order to keep from downgrading the method we suggest the attached language be used instead. This will match the section to what is written in the Poultry chapter and keep VSD Plus in the Permitted in Constrained Circumstances if that is where you think it should be. We were also able to find a Book reference to support this language. The reference list will be cleaned up to match the rest of the document but we are in a crunch to finalize the main language before our main contact in Publications goes out of town.

Please let us know if these changes would be acceptable.
