A BIT OF HISTORY ABOUT EASTLAKE...

The Eastlake Community Council was originally formed to stop the construction of the famous "Roanoke Reef" project, a 112 unit over-the-water condominium planned at the foot of East Roanoke Street. The project announcement came in 1967, just after a new sewer line was completed around Lake Union and Portage Bay to help ease the pollution from the Houseboats and ensure that they would meet newly regulated city building codes. Unfortunately, this development opened a new potential for over-the-water apartment construction which also led to the construction of the five-story apartment building called Union Harbor (now a condominium). At about the same time, a group of investors called the Roanoke Reef Associates bought property at the foot of E. Roanoke Street, and applied for a building permit. In 1969, they obtained a lease to some land under Lake Union, and the Superintendent of Buildings issued an unheard of "conditional permit", subject to structural and ordinance checks. In October, 1970, the conditions of the permit were removed. In the meantime, the skeleton of the Eastlake Community Council was formed and Margaret Newcomb was made acting President. In March, 1971, Roanoke Reef was underway. The original Boeing Airplane Company seaplane hangar located on the site was demolished and ten steel pipes were driven into the lake bed. One week later, the new Eastlake Community Council staged a "sail-in". The press was there, petitions were signed, and someone puttered from boat to boat with a tin can, collecting donations for an attack on the Roanoke Reef Association. After the sail-in, the Eastlake Community Council grew rapidly. The council's first elected President became Anita Klapper. The first Board of Directors included Terry Pettus from the Floating Homes Association, Marc Rasmussen, an electrical draftsman, Mark Clemmens, a traffic planner with the city Engineering Dept., John Southern, a houseboat repairman, Phyllis Boyker, a property owner, Dick Wagner, an architect, Margaret Newcomb, and Ken Longman. After a three year court battle, the Roanoke Reef's building permit was declared illegal. The condominium was stopped, and the Roanoke Reef Association successfully sued the City of Seattle for $2.9 million! The site is now used for houseboats. Since the Roanoke Reef victory, the Eastlake Community Council has fought many, many other developments, in keeping with the goals and policies of the neighborhood, and also to ensure compliance to proper zoning and building codes. But the work is never over; it merely goes through 'sleeper' stages. So, always keep your eyes and ears open. You'll never know what might "pop-up" next! If you know of anything, stop by our potluck and tell us.
