1. What year was Lilian Bader born?
2. What Caribbean country was Lilian’s father from?
3. Where did Lilian first work?
4. What actions did Lilian take to leave a legacy?
She joined the Women’s Auxiliary Air Force (WAAF) at the beginning of 1941 and was one of the first women to be trained as an instrument repairer, a trade that was newly opened to women. In December 1941, Lilian became a Leading Aircraftwoman and soon gained the rank of Acting Corporal.

During the War she married a soldier called Ramsay Bader, who was a tank driver with the Army. Ramsay’s father was from Sierra Leone and his mother was white British. In February 1944, Lilian left the WAAF and she and Ramsey had two sons. Subsequently she gained a degree from London University and became a teacher.
