

SUMMER

With BBQ and camping season off to a wonderful beginning, every youthful soul dreams of spending at least one night under the stars. There's something magical about a warm summer's evening, searching for shooting stars and talking about life. The avid stargazer begins his night with a quick look at M13, the great globular cluster in Hercules, swings by Lyra to admire the ring nebula, checks out galaxy pair M81 and M82, and then turns to appreciate any planets that just happen to be hanging around.
