

AUTUMN

Sinking slowly below the horizon are Sagittarius and Scorpius, with their glorious deep-sky objects within. The Summer Triangle points down and to the southwest, setting shortly after sunset. If you stay up until midnight in mid-autumn, the constellation Orion peeks his head over the horizon. The Orion Nebula is still too low for evening observation, but it soon will take its place as a primary target in every stargazer's sights.

