

“The race between the prosecutor and the felon is in full swing”

Published August 4, 2024

In 2020, dependable, competent, and comfortable (like a large, soft sweater) Joe Biden was the answer. He was the tonic we needed after the Jan. 6 2021, insurrection. The Republican look-at-me show starring Lauren Boebert, Marjorie Taylor Greene, Matt Gaetz, Jim Jordan, Ted Cruz, and Tommy Tuberville did not deter our determined president. Biden has gotten more done for the American people in his first term than most presidents do in eight years. His legislative proposals kept passing and making our country better.

But we were all still so sad and divided. Republican storytellers went on right-wing media and wove tales of impending doom. Biden seemed in decline, and the debate of bully vs feeble broke our hearts. And then the clouds broke. Our quirky new candidate, Vice President Kamala Harris, is fun, competent, joyful, and a little silly. MAGA is mean, weird, and, suddenly, so boring. Coconuts and Venn diagrams are in, and Harris is brat. The race between the prosecutor and the felon is in full swing.
