JD Vance and Narcissism

To the editor: Vance is absolutely right about one thing — our hopes and dreams for our children and grandchildren are what drive us in envisioning what government should look like. Government can provide opportunity and resources for the future; that's what it does best.

What he seems totally clueless about is caring about young people unless they carry your own genetic material, which is simply an exercise in narcissism.

None of us is going to live in a future that's not created by, and populated by, lots and lots of other people's children. We need to care about all of them and enact policies that give them hope and a future.
