

Published August 27, 2024

We can't go back in climate fight

About two decades ago, Al Gore warned us of what was to come if we didn't take climate change seriously, and those warnings have come to fruition.

As predicted, water temperatures have risen; winds and fires have become more wild and difficult to contain; hurricanes, tornadoes and rainstorms have intensified.

Yet Donald Trump vows to once again pull the United States out of the Paris Agreement. Thankfully, President Joe Biden rejoined it after Trump damaged international trust in the U.S.

Vice President Kamala Harris has long been an advocate of protecting the environment. She understands the destructive forces of climate change and is committed to building on the Biden administration's record.

Harris plans to curb fossil fuels and incentivize companies and communities to transition to renewable energy. I feel confident that with Harris' leadership, we can slow the climate change crisis — because if we reverse that commitment, as Trump plans to do, our planet is doomed.

Pam Rossman Monroe, San Diego