HERE'S SOME MILKSHAKE HISTORY

When the term "milkshake" was first used in print in 1885, milkshakes were an alcoholic whiskey drink that has been described as a "sturdy, healthful eggnog type of drink, with eggs, whiskey, etc., served as a tonic as well as a treat". However, by 1900, the term referred to "wholesome drinks made with chocolate, strawberry, or vanilla syrups." By the early 1900s people were asking for the new treat, often with ice cream." By the 1930s, milkshakes were a popular drink at malt shops, which were the typical soda fountain of the period ... used by students as a meeting place or hangout."

The history of the electric blender, malted milk drinks, and milkshakes are interconnected. Before the widespread availability of electric blenders, milkshake-type drinks were hand-shaken mixture of crushed ice and milk, sugar, and flavorings.

Around 1910, the blender was invented and milkshakes began to take on their modern, whipped, aerated, and frothy form.

The use of malted milk powder in milkshakes was popularized in the US by the Chicago drugstore chain Walgreens. Malted milk powder — a mixture of evaporated milk, malted barley, and wheat flour — had been invented by William Horlick in 1897 for use as an easily digested restorative health drink for disabled people and children, and as an infant's food. However, healthy people soon began drinking beverages made with malted milk simply for the taste, and malted milk beverages containing milk, chocolate syrup, and malt powder became a standard offering at soda fountains.

By the 1950s, popular places to drink milkshakes were Woolworth's 5 & 10 lunch counters, diners, burger joints, and drugstore soda fountains. These establishments often prominently displayed a shining chrome or stainless steel milkshake mixing machine.

Soda fountain staff had their own jargon, such as "Burn One All the Way" (chocolate malted with chocolate ice cream), "Twist It, Choke It, and Make It Cackle" (chocolate malted with an egg), "Shake One in the Hay" (a strawberry shake), and a "White Cow" (a vanilla milkshake).

Oscar Moon's shakes are made the old fashioned way: hand-dipped, mixed with care and topped to perfection. Whether you grab your treat to go or enjoy it at our blast-from-the-past soda counter, we hope you get a little taste of yesteryear ... and a whole lotta joy.

Enjoy y'all.

MORE THAN MILKSHAKES

What's with the name? Well, we found the name "Oscar Moon" scrawled on a door jam upstairs in the old Martin Stove building before it was revived into what is now called "Stovehouse."

We soon learned that "Oscar" (born Howard Floyd Moon) worked in shipping & receiving, and it's said that if you needed ANYTHING, you asked Oscar. That Oscar would take care of you. His children, many of whom also worked at Martin Stove over the years, said he had a "servant's heart." That might explain why, at age 10, he insisted everyone call him Oscar—the name of a neighborhood do-gooder he idolized for "helping folks."

OSCAR MOON, HUNTSVILLE, AL 1955

For the rest of his long life he was known only as Oscar Floyd Moon. And he was known for treating people right.

We hope you always feel "treated right" here.
