For Armenta Adams Hummings Dumisani, the time had come. It was 1993. Winston Salem, North Carolina residents would witness the birth of a phenomenon in the field of classical music that would eventually attract national attention. The Gateways Music Festival was designed to facilitate the realization of her long-held dream to open the gates to classical music so as many people as possible could have the experience of seeing and hearing that musical genre performed live.

The seeds had been sown before the Hummings' family moved to Winston Salem from Brunswick, Georgia so their son, Amadi, then 11 years old, could attend the North Carolina School of the Arts. Daniel Andrews, a music graduate of Tuskegee, had prepared the community for the advent of Gateways by presenting annual performances of musical works such Mendelssohn's Elijah, Debois' Seven Last Words of Christ and Handel's Messiah. Years later, in 2001, Andrews would be invited to Rochester to conduct the Gateways Music Festival Orchestra and Multi-Ethnic Chorus in a performance of the "Hallelujah Chorus" from Handel's Messiah during the festival. Michael Morgan, the festival's conductor that year, gave the podium to Andrews to honor him for providing the initial inspiration for Gateways.

In 1993, this acclaimed concert pianist, decided the time to create Gateways was now. The first festival was held April 16 - 18 on a small scale. The orchestra, was conducted by African American violist Caroline Jones. Musicians were recruited regionally from the Winston Salem, Greensboro, Hickory and Salisbury symphony orchestras as well as from the orchestra and faculty of the North Carolina School of the Arts (NCSA). The chamber music concert was held at NCSA and the orchestral program's venue was the Reynolds High School auditorium. Winston Salem Delta Fine Arts was the presenting organization and also acted as fiscal agent for donations. The group's founder, Simona Atkins Allen had been a classical pianist.

A credit line was offered by then vice president of the Winston Salem Journal, Jim Fowler, who was president of the Winston Salem Symphony board. Hummings Duisani remembers that Fowler “simply put his credit card up to make sure the festival would happen.”

The 1994 Gateways Music Festival was held October 5 - 11. By then the festival's first board of directors had been formed. Its chairman was John Williams, an internationally acclaimed bass-baritone. In the festival's second year, the pool of participating musicians expanded far beyond the Winston Salem region to include members of major orchestras such as the Boston Symphony and the New York Philharmonic. Concerts were held on campuses of Winston Salem State University and the North Carolina School of the Arts.

The fledgling Gateways board met at Emmanuel Baptist Church in Winston Salem. The church’s pastor, Rev. John Mendez, had sung opera in his youth. In a demonstration of unity and support, Larry Leon Hamlin, founder of the National Black Theater Festival, joined the GMF board to share his knowledge and expertise on the creation of an arts festival. Claire Nanton, a volunteer with the United Way, made an outstanding contribution to the 1994 festival as a fundraiser.

In the first two Gateways festivals, 50 percent of the participating musicians were African American. But over the years, in response to the immense need for performance opportunities for classically-trained African American musicians, the festival evolved into a still-integrated, but primarily African American event.

A major development in the festival’s history occurred in 1994 when she was appointed Distinguished Community Mentor by the Eastman School of Music. After joining the faculty and moving to Rochester, the festival became a biennial event in Rochester with underwriting and support of the Eastman School, then headed by Robert Freeman.
The Gateways Music Festival has become a classical music celebration featuring performances by musicians of African descent from throughout the country and also features works written by African American composers.

The Festival remains a product of her vision: to make the broader community aware of talented musicians of African descent; to provide those musicians with networking and public performance opportunities; to make classical music more accessible, especially to people, who because of economic, social or other circumstances, may never have attended a classical music event; and to provide inspiration and role models for young musicians of all racial and ethnic backgrounds. All of the Gateways Music Festival events are free.

Prior to joining the Eastman School of Music faculty, Hummings, a Juilliard-trained concert pianist, for many years pursued a professional career of critically-acclaimed performances around the world to more than 27 countries and five continents. Upon her return from a U. S. State Department tour overseas, she was honored at a State Department reception attended by then-Secretary of State Dean Rusk, in recognition of her contributions to international relationships. The Juilliard School honored the award-winning pianist as one of 100 graduates to represent the accomplishments of Juilliard graduates when it celebrated its 100th anniversary. Long-retired as an associate professor of music at the Eastman School of Music, she stepped down as president and artistic director of the Gateways Music Festival at the end of the 2009 season, positions she had held since the festival's beginning. She remains the festival advisor and the Eastman School of Music's collaboration with the festival continues.

The 2011 Gateways Music Festival marked the beginning of a new era in the festival's history. her vision as the founder continues through a group she established within the Gateways organization: the Artistic Programs Committee. Led by Lee Koonce, executive director of Ballet Hispanico in New York City (and former executive director of the Third Street Music School Settlement in New York City), the committee is composed of professional musicians, a number of whom are Eastman School of Music graduates. The committee's primary role is to plan, develop and evaluate the music programming for each festival, and to continue its founder's vision by continuing to "open the gates" to exciting networking and performance opportunities for musicians of African descent.
Florence Price (1887-1953)

By Barbara Wright-Pryor

Florence Beatrice Price became the first black female composer to have a symphony performed by a major American orchestra when Music Director Frederick Stock and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra played the world premiere of her Symphony No. 1 in E minor on June 15, 1933. The Chicago Daily News reported: “It is a faultless work, a work that speaks its own message with restraint and yet with passion. . . worthy of a place in the regular symphonic repertory.”

Although this premiere brought instant recognition and fame, success as a composer was not to be hers. She would “continue to wage an uphill battle – a battle much larger than any war that pure talent and musical skill could win. It was a battle in which the nation was embroiled – a dangerous mélange of segregation, Jim Crow laws, entrenched racism, and sexism.” (Women’s Voices for Change, March 8, 2013).

Price graduated as high school valedictorian at age 14 and left Little Rock in 1904 to attend the New England Conservatory and, after following her mother’s advice to present herself as being of Mexican descent, earned a bachelor of music degree in 1906, the only one of 2,000 students to pursue a double major in organ and piano performance. Following graduation she taught for one year before returning to Little Rock where she taught privately and became active in composition.

Little Rock had been a comfortable city for Black residents but as racial problems began to develop, resulting in a lynching, she moved with her husband attorney Thomas J. Price and their two daughters to Chicago in 1927. Her career flourished after the move to Chicago, and it was around 1928 when the G. Schirmer and McKinley publishing companies began to issue her songs, piano music, and especially her instructional pieces for piano. She filed for divorce in 1928 and she and the children moved in with her student, friend and composer Margaret Bonds. Professor Dominique-René de Lerma, distinguished American musicologist and eminent historian “As a single person, she earned a living from the sales of her piano works and, under the pseudonym of Vee Jay, as composer of popular songs. She also played organ for the silent films and orchestrated for WGN radio.”

While planning a trip to Europe, Florence Price died of a stroke on June 3, 1953 in Chicago, her adopted city that she had come to love; a city that, in 1964, named an elementary school for her as its own recognition of her legacy as a Chicago musician and an important black composer. The world deserves to experience her music and that of her colleagues and contemporaries music that Antonin Dvorak would affirm as authentic and that had as its basis those songs of enslaved Africans that survived the middle passage to become firmly entrenched in the American musical landscape.

This biography is redacted from the original as written by Barbara Wright-Pryor for the Chicago Symphony Orchestra’s Playbill for concerts featuring Price’s work in May-June 2013. Wright-Pryor is President of the Chicago Music Association of the National Association of Negro Musicians, Inc., the organization to which Florence Price belonged when her Symphony No. 1 in E minor was performed by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra in 1933. MICHAEL ABELS (1962)
Michael Abels has been described as a composer with a gift for “[juxtaposing] elements unleashed in an irresistible display of orchestral color” (Cleveland Plain Dealer). His much-admired piece Global Warming has received over 100 performances by many prominent symphony orchestras.

Born in Phoenix, AZ, Abels grew up in rural South Dakota and attended the University of Southern California. He currently serves as Director of Music for New Roads School in Santa Monica, overseeing a program that provides hands-on instruction in the latest technologies integrally important to contemporary popular music. Aside from his activities as a composer, arranger, and educator, Abels is also an amateur triathlete.

JAMES LEE III (1975)
James Lee III, from St. Joseph, Michigan, is an accomplished pianist and composer widely admired for his work in both disciplines. He is also a professor of music theory and composition at Morgan State University.

He earned a Bachelor of Music degree in piano performance, a Master of Music in composition and a Doctor of Musical Arts (DMA) in composition from the University of Michigan.

The premier of his doctoral dissertation, Beyond Rivers of Vision, was performed in October 2005 by the National Symphony Orchestra, directed by Leonard Slatkin at the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts.

COLERIDGE-TAYLOR PERKINSON (1932-2004)
Coleridge-Taylor Perkinson was an innovative American composer whose interests spanned the worlds of jazz, dance, pop, film, television, and classical music. Named after Afro-British composer Samuel Coleridge-Taylor (1875–1912), Perkinson attended the High School of Music and Art in New York City, the Manhattan School of Music and Princeton University. He co-founded the Symphony of the New World in 1965 and later became its Music Director. He was also Music Director of the Jerome Robbins’ American Theater Lab and the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater. He composed and conducted music for films including A Warm December starring Sidney Poitier and the documentary Montgomery to Memphis about Martin Luther King. Perkinson’s music has a blend of Baroque counterpoint; American Romanticism; elements of the blues, spirituals, and black folk music; and rhythmic ingenuity.

WILLIAM GRANT STILL (1895-1978)
William Grant Still is revered as “The Dean of African-American Composers.” Born in rural Mississippi and reared in Little Rock, Arkansas, Still attended Wilberforce University and the Oberlin Conservatory of Music.

Still’s output is impressive: over 150 works which include nine operas, five symphonies, four ballets and compositions for piano, voice, band, chorus and various chamber works. Since his death, there have been many tributes to his memory, the most important being the increasing performances of his music.

About the Gateways Music Festival performance: Many of Still’s original vocal compositions pair naturally with traditional spirituals. The song Bayou Home was written in 1944 for solo voice and piano, with lyrics by his wife and frequent collaborator, Verna Arvey. The song tells the story of a man leaving his love and home on the bayou in search of life’s meaning. The spirituals in this set are in the “concert hall spiritual” tradition begun by the Fisk Jubilee Singers and carried on by singers like Paul Robeson and Marian Anderson.
“Bravo to this year’s participants of the Gateways Music Festival!!” - Stephen Kanaek, owner

Black Women Composers: Celebrating Their Lives and Their Music...At Last!
Multi-Media Presentation by Paul J. Burgett, PhD
University of Rochester

This is the third in a series of biennial Gateways Music Festival talks....this time discussing women composers of African descent, many of whose names and works have lain unrecognized and in the shadows for far too long: Florence Price, Margaret Bonds, Lettie Alston, Dolores White, Dorothy Moore, Undine Smith Moore and Valerie Capers are among a few of the names of these great artists. Fortunately, thanks to more accessible recordings and live performances, greater light is being shed on their work. This talk will discuss the music and lives of a few of these composers, especially Florence Price, whose Symphony #1 in E Minor is featured on the 2015 Gateways Music Festival orchestra concert, Sunday, August 16, 2015 at 4:00 p.m. in Kodak Hall at Eastman Theatre.
