

Innovative Civic and Community Engagement Tools

March 20, 2025
Raleigh, NC

The National Civic League: A long history of innovation...

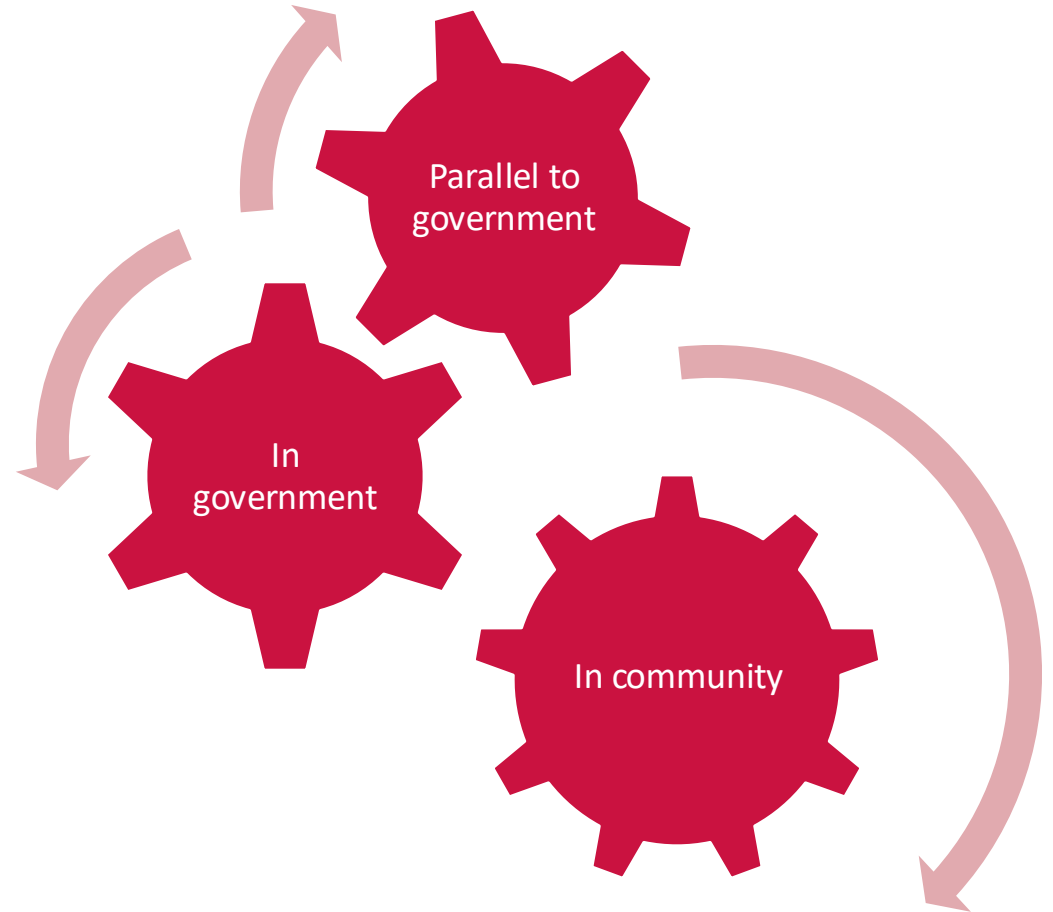

Founded in 1894 by Teddy Roosevelt, Louis Brandeis, Frederick Law Olmsted, and Mary Munford, NCL established the Model City Charter, city manager form of government, and other reforms to fight corruption, end patronage, and advance public health.

The mission of the National Civic League is to advance civic engagement to create equitable, thriving communities through key programs: community assistance, awards and events, research and publications.

Learning Objectives

- 1. How to Empower the Public with Citizens' Assemblies*
- 2. How to Improve Public Engagement in Official Meetings*
- 3. How to Broaden Participation at the Neighborhood and Community Level*

The Problem of Distrust in Government

Public Trust in Government: 1958-2024

Public trust in the federal government, which has been low for decades, has increased modestly since 2023. As of April 2024, 22% of Americans say they trust the government in Washington to do what is right “just about always” (2%) or “most of the time” (21%). Last year, 16% said they trusted the government just about always or most of the time, which was among the lowest measures in nearly seven decades of polling.

What Type of Participation Do People Want?

About half of Americans say their local government should implement systems to give people more decision-making power.

Figure 11. Percent of Americans who say their local government should or should not implement each of the following systems or that they are not sure, 2019 survey:

Local government should implement Local government should not implement Not sure

Base: All respondents, N=1,000.

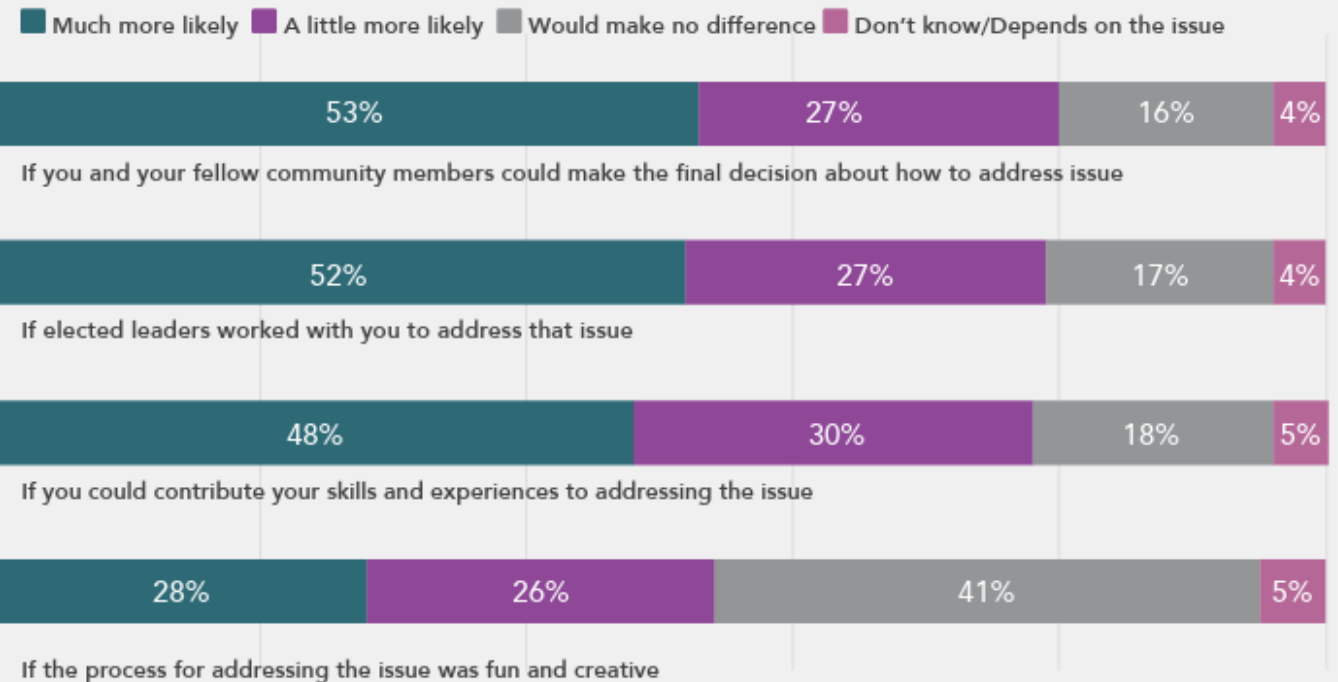

Numbers do not add up to 100 percent owing to the 5 percent of respondents who either refused the question or responded "Depends" or "My local government already does this" and are not represented in the figure.

Would this Make a Difference?

People would be more likely to get involved in local issues if they had decision-making power.

What is a Citizens' Assembly?

A citizens', civic, or community assembly is a representative group of residents tasked with learning, deliberating, and making recommendations to a formal authority on a policy issue.

Petaluma, CA (2022)

How are People Selected?

Residents in a community receive a letter in the mail to participate and register their information online.

Participants are selected randomly to fill quotas based on relevant local census data and context, most commonly using age, gender, race, and geography as selection criteria, and sometimes also using education, income, or stances on political issues.

The 'civic lottery' outcome is a representative sample of the community.

CONNECTING TO PARLIAMENT

WHAT'S THE ISSUE?

The average age of representatives in the Parliament of Australia is 52. This means a generational gap between elected officials and young people who are between the ages of 15-30 years old. This group of elected officials make decisions that will have impact for decades to come.

Climate change is the most pressing example – the lack of action by the current Parliament will impact young people for the rest of their lives. This is true for other issues too including the prospects of receiving quality education, having good and secure jobs, or buying a home.

You are invited to attend a deliberative town hall event about the issue of youth representation and lowering the voting age.

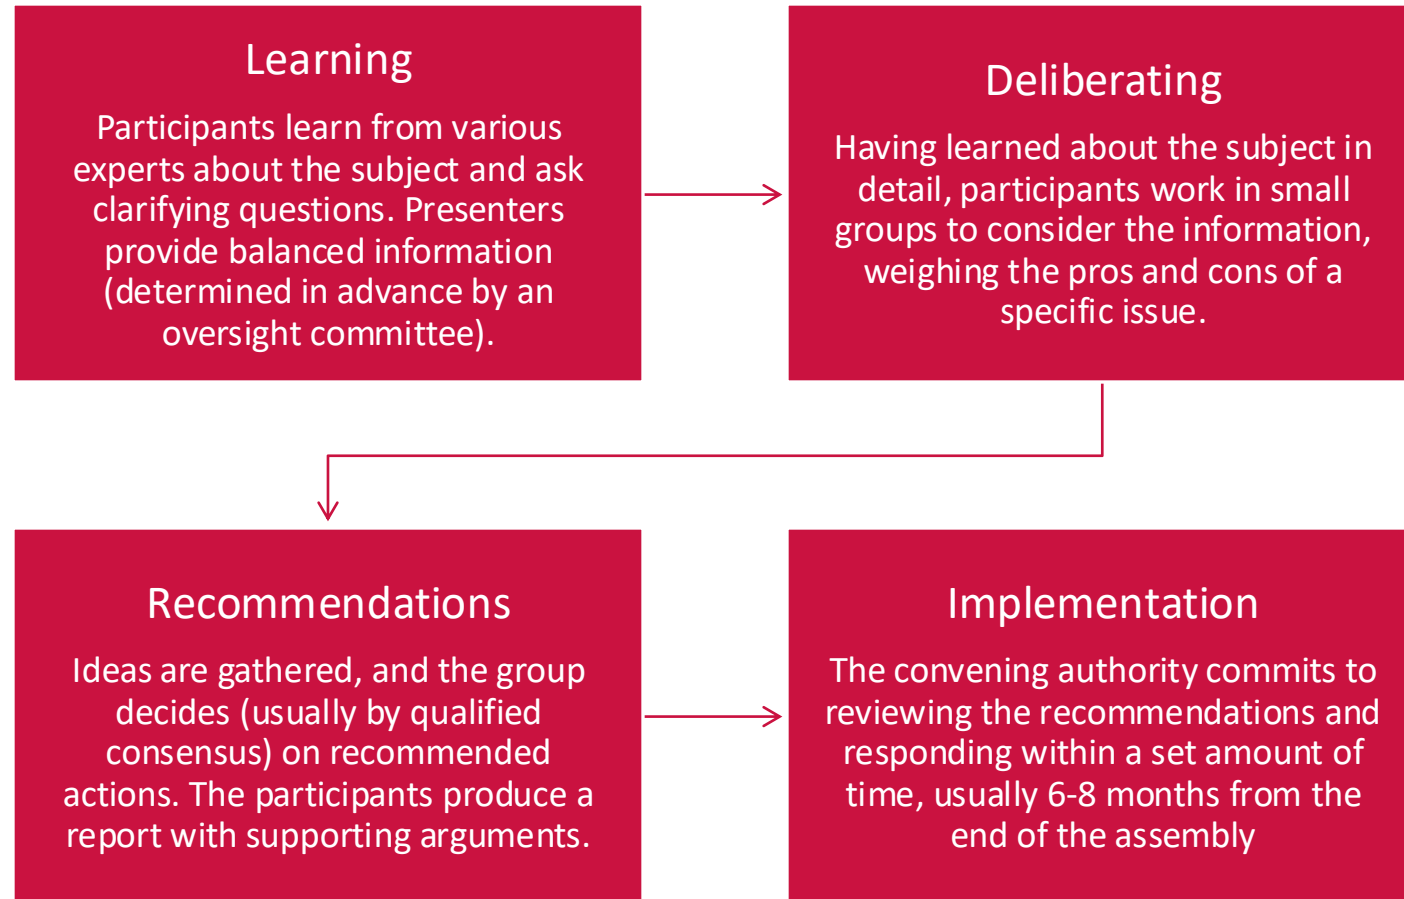

- It is important to include young people in conversations around the issues that affect them directly.
- How can we improve the inclusion and representation of young people in Australian politics?
- What are the possible reform pathways for this? Should we lower the voting age and allow people under the age of 18 to vote?
- Should we think about different ways of making Members of Parliament better representatives of youth and their interests?

Panelot (panel selection by lot) is a not-for-profit system for randomly selecting citizens' panels in a way that is representative of the population and fair to volunteers.

What are the Stages?

Pros vs Cons of Citizens' Assemblies

Pro

Time: Decisions are made by reasoned arguments, informed by hours of learning

Representation: Participants encounter people from all walks of life

Empowerment: The public makes their own decisions without political influence

Con

Cost: Citizens' Assemblies will range based on the group size (which includes stipends). General costs are $250k+

Political Will: If a referendum doesn't determine decisions, it's up to politicians to determine implementation.

Rarity: Citizens' Assemblies can tend to be one-off experiences despite their success.

Why Use A Citizens' Assembly?

01

To include the public.
Examine broad policies
and issues that are politically deadlocked or don't have a clear answer.

02

To make assessments.
Weigh policy options
through two-way
communication and make recommendations that are collectively agreed upon.

03

To change opinions and build trust. We learn what the public thinks and observe new ways of thinking about issues,
people and institutions.

Roundtable Discussion (20mins)

Questions

1. What are your general thoughts on having a group of residents randomly selected based on diverse demographics come together to make recommendations on an issue for a government to implement? Would giving the public more opportunities to make policy decisions build more trust in government and between people?
2. Would you personally want to participate in one? Do you think this model offers something different and relevant from what you've experienced?
3. What issues do you think are suitable for your community to use civic assemblies?

The Problem of Contentious Public Meetings

/ Across the country, constituents are grilling their Republican members of Congress – and the heated exchanges are going viral online.

This council is so unpopular it can't hold meetings in public

City of Casey ratepayers have slammed their council's decision to ban the public from attending in person their monthly meeting, the move coming after police we called in to last month's event amid ratepayer fury over a slew of local laws.

A cartoon illustration of the White Rabbit from Alice's Adventures in Wonderland. He is depicted in a state of panic, running towards the left. He has large, wide eyes and a red nose. He is wearing a red jacket over a white shirt with a dark bow tie, and grey trousers. He is carrying a large, round pocket watch in his right hand, which is visible on the left side of the frame. The watch face shows numbers 1 through 12, with the hands pointing to approximately 10:10. The background is a dark, stormy sky with swirling clouds. The overall style is classic animation.

What We Heard from Participants

Better overall rating of meeting

- 47.9% to 100% 'good rating'

Less 'usual suspects' attending

- 14% to 54.5% first time attending

Better interactions/civil dialogue

- 44% to 80%

Feeling included sooner

- 40% agree / 20% strongly agree

I really enjoyed being able to have a conversation with people from different points of view and with different experiences. It was an interesting and dynamic dialogue. Listening to the final report it was good to feel heard in the quotes made by city council representatives. Thank you.

-Resident

The chance to listen to community members conversations, really listen. Not react or respond.

-Council member

Casual conversation led to less tense hot topics. It seemed to allow everyone to feel heard even when opinions differed.

-Staff

LESSON

Many people at public meetings are "performing" for one another, not expecting to be heard by officials

Open meeting laws allow more innovation than people realize

Can't just change format: need to engage more people and a wider variety of people

Most people want change; a small, vocal minority does not

Public Meetings help to understand:
What are the civic opportunities available?

Roundtable Discussion (20mins)

Questions

1. What are your experiences with public comment periods? How would you like to see public participation happen in official meetings?
2. Would providing different types of opportunities within government processes encourage diverse people to be involved in decision-making? What are some ways to strengthen and renovate existing processes in Raleigh City governance to build more public trust?
3. What do you think about using digital tools and platforms to support asynchronous participation in government processes?

The Problem of Civic (Dis)Connections in Neighborhoods

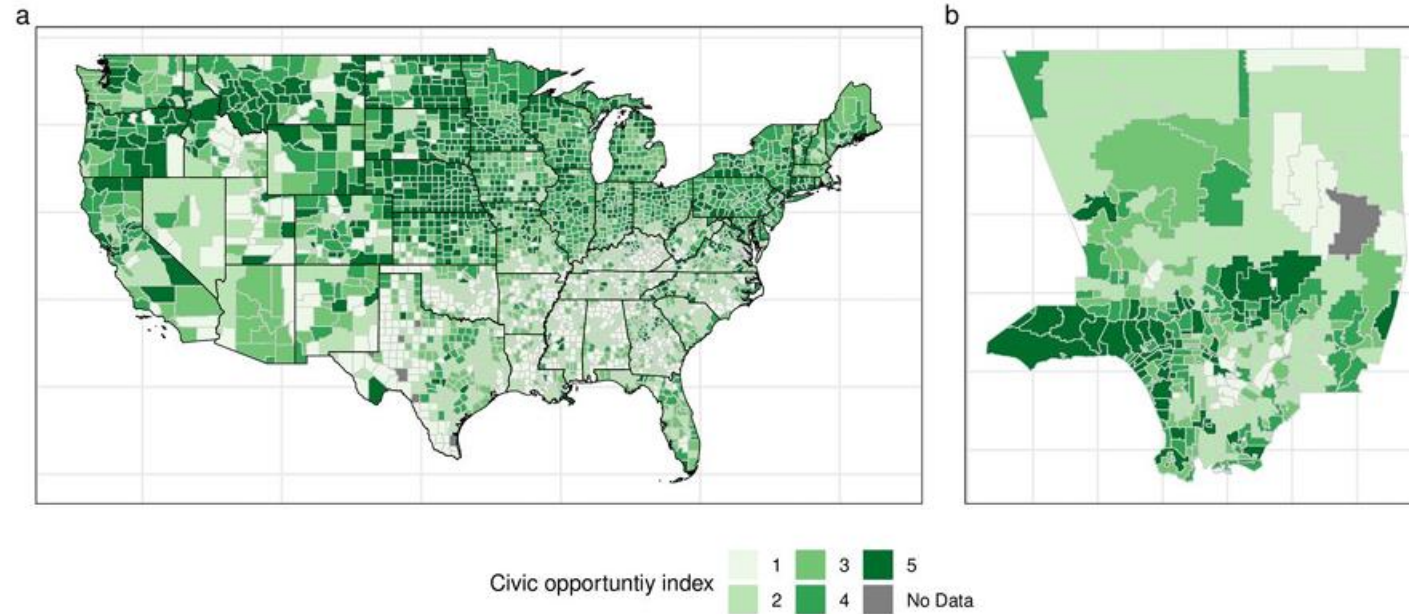

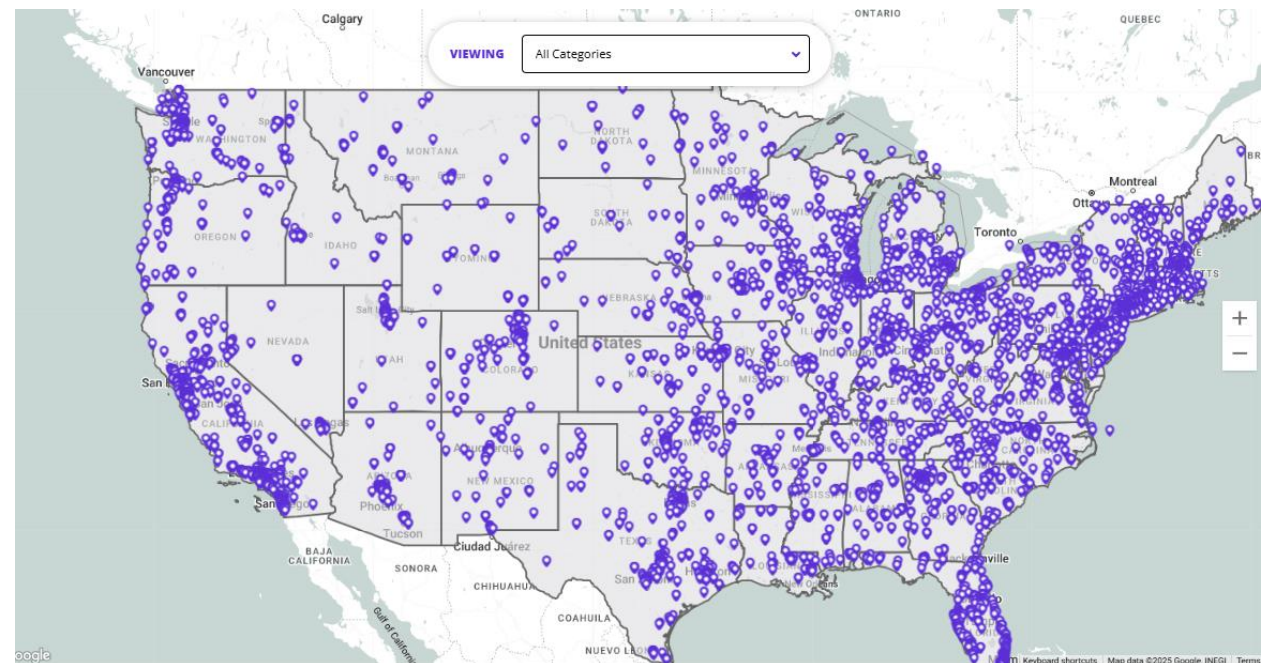

Figure 1: The Geography of Civic Opportunity in the United States. The Civic Opportunity Index ranks counties based on their cumulative civic opportunity scores per capita. Each civic opportunity score represents the range of opportunities (0-1) provided by an organization. The index divides the counties of the continental United States (Panel A) or zip codes of Los Angeles county (Panel B) into five grades: from 1 (low civic opportunity, shaded in white) to 5 (high civic opportunity, shaded in green).

Sub-Municipal Governance

Community Boards: New York City's 59 community districts have a Community Board composed of up to 50 volunteer members appointed by the borough president (elected by the public), with half nominated by City Council members representing the district. These boards serve in an advisory capacity on land use, zoning, and the city budget process. They hold regular public meetings where residents can voice concerns and provide input on neighborhood issues.
