The Stats (Infographic)

Elevated autistic traits & sensory sensitivities within the broader Trans population

Higher percentage (than cis people) suspect undiagnosed autism (may go undiagnosed at even higher rates than cis women)

Trans + Autism

4-9% of Autists estimated to be Transgender or Genderdiverse

1 in 3 reports having their gender identity questioned by professionals because of their Autism diagnosis

1 in 3

More likely to have a second co-occurring ND (ADHD, OCD, bipolar & schizophrenia)

Trans individuals 3-6 X more likely to be autistic
Rundown of the #s

Warrier et al., 2021 found that transgender people were 3-6 x more likely to be diagnosed as autistic compared with cisgender adults. This only includes DIAGNOSED Autistics— and many adults remain undiagnosed. Based on the global population, Warrier et al. 2021 estimate somewhere between 3-9% of transgender adults may be autistic.

Regardless of an autism diagnosis, transgender adults are more likely to report a higher level of autistic traits & sensory sensitives (compared with cis adults) (Warrier et al., 2021).

Trans adults are more likely to suspect undiagnosed autism than cis men and cis-women suggesting they may go undiagnosed at even higher rates (Warrier et al., 2021).

Hisle-Gorman, et al., 2019 found Autistic children/adolescence were 4 times more likely to be Gender-Diverse.

4.8% to 26% of people who present at GD clinics had an autism diagnosis (compared to 1-2% of the general population) (Warrier et al., 2021).

1 in 3 Trans-Autists reports having their gender questioned because they were Autistic (Warrier et al., 2021).

While it can be difficult to quantify gender variance, past studies identified that between 4% and 5.4% of autistic children may potentially be transgender or gender-diverse, (compared to 0.7% of non-autistic children (Jansen et al., 2016, Strang et al., 2014, May et al., 2017).

Strang et al., 2014 study 1605 children who were referred to medical providers for gender issues. Among the group, significantly greater proportions were Autistic (5.4%) or ADHD (4.8%) (compared to 1.7% in the comparison group). Autistic children were 7.59 x more likely to express gender variance ADHD children were 6.64 x more likely. Gender variance occurred equally among AFAB and AMAB individuals.

Notably this research doesn’t specify what this looks like when the Trans-Autistic is also BBIMP (Black, Brown, Indigenous, Melanated People) (a term coined by Louiza Doran @accordingtoweeze on IG).

Implications

There is need to improve access to diagnosis and care
A need to provide more tailored support (i.e. offer specialized support groups such as Autistic support groups for Trans teens).
Medical providers should include routine Autism screeners when working with children/adolescence referred for gender issues
