

HERRICK & WHITE CONTINUES A LEGACY

Owners Groom Long-Term Employees for Succession

Cumberland, Rhode Island — June 30, 2022 — In their 45th year of business, Herrick & White is continuing a tradition of employee-to-ownership succession. Kevin Fuoroli, President; Gerry Ferland, Director of Manufacturing; Jay Walden, Executive Vice President of Sales and Marketing; and Jeff Amylon, Director of Project Management and Engineering, have all transitioned into co-ownership of the architectural millwork firm. Having mentored and prepared their successors for several years, Ken Bertram and Gary Rousseau, are retiring members of the recent ownership team. Along with Steve Brannigan, the company's Chief Financial Officer, this trio oversaw Herrick & White's continued growth and improvements to garner industry awards and client accolades.

The new ownership group has been diligently preparing for a successful leadership transition. Kevin sums up the company's plan for the future: "We are very fortunate that since 2007, the previous owners have made Herrick & White a better and stronger company and improved employee benefits. Jeff, Gerry, Jay, and I have spent our entire careers in this industry and have 76 years of combined experience right here at Herrick & White. We will continue building on their success, improving our technologies and processes. We strive to produce high-quality millwork on schedule and on budget, along with next-level customer service."

About Herrick & White: Herrick & White Architectural Woodworkers began with two craftsmen working in a small garage 45 years ago. Since then, the company has been crafting fine custom architectural millwork for exclusive residences, historic renovations, commercial projects, and custom heirloom furniture.
