Child Development	Attachment: Theory How to Promote Understanding, Increase Stability and Build Lasting Relationships with Youth in Care	This training focuses on strategies that parents and providers can use with children and youth who have disrupted attachment during childhood due to trauma, neglect and abuse. Participants are provided with information about several types of attachment-promoting activities that can be used to develop healthy relational templates, resilience and counterbalance the effects of abuse on the children's pattern of attachment. Each of the practices delineated provides an opportunity to interrupt the multigenerational transmission process of developmental trauma through physiological and emotional changes to the child or youth resulting in improved coping strategies and availability for learning. This is an in person training 1266 14th St., Oakland, Ca 94607.
