NNDPA and The Living New Deal
Building a national inventory

NNDPA and The Living New Deal have teamed up to build a much-needed national inventory of New Deal projects around the country. An interactive website is now available to receive photos and information on all existing New Deal projects nationwide. We invite anyone to share information electronically that you may have in your state (art, buildings, parks, museums, etc.).

Send information to:

The “New Deal” was a significant period of time in our country’s history (1933-1943) when President Franklin Roosevelt’s administration created various economic relief programs that played a pivotal role in enabling America to grow out of the Great Depression.

New Deal programs were designed to help people help themselves and their communities. These labor intensive efforts built numerous public structures all over the country, implemented conservation activities to preserve the land, and provided numerous social service projects. Arts and cultural programs were brought to distant communities, public buildings were enhanced with art, and our people and their activities were recorded. A great deal of this is still intact, but needs attention before this important legacy is lost.

Obvious parallels between the New Deal and today’s struggles exist. The New Deal clearly offers many lessons that can serve as a blueprint for renewing American prosperity and ingenuity. To learn more...

Who We Are

The National New Deal Preservation Assn. (NNDPA) is a non-profit, tax-exempt 501(c)(3) organization devoted to preserving the country's New Deal legacy, through the identification, documentation, preservation and public education about the New Deal and its profound impact on Americans in the Great Depression – specifically through the visual and performing arts, literature, crafts, structures and environmental projects.

Preserving the Country’s New Deal Legacy

We are scholars, researchers, archivists, history buffs, librarians, educators, as well as individuals who lived through the New Deal, or remember the stories their family members told them about their experiences of living through it. We also appeal to those interested in historic preservation of post offices, schools, courthouses, museums, parks, and monuments.

We believe a great part of America’s story and history is being overlooked and lost. Younger generations do not understand, or lack appreciation for New Deal efforts, and the good these programs did and still do for this country.

Forming New State Chapters

We invite individuals, families, other educational and historic preservation groups to join NNDPA to help us identify, document, and preserve New Deal treasures in their towns, counties and states. Groups with related historic preservation goals are encouraged to join us as “affiliated organizations.”

We can offer useful guidance and share materials and information to interested groups and individuals on how best to preserve their New Deal legacy.

Education and Community Outreach

Through our website, email and newsletter, along with “ Fireside Chats, ” lectures, preservation workshops, exhibits and other outreach activities, NNDPA actively communicates about the New Deal legacy. We provide insight and perspective on its history and impact, and the many lessons it offers in the context of today’s economic struggles. A great deal of our efforts are also focused on networking and sharing information with other related groups to enhance their programs and activities with pertinent New Deal information.

Current efforts advocate:

• Preserving murals, paintings and buildings that are threatened with destruction, as the result of development or renovation of existing sites.
• Greater public education and visibility of what the New Deal accomplished, and its continuing impact on this great country.
• Legislation and private funding to preserve and restore artwork.
• Honoring the accomplishments of those individuals who were part of the New Deal era, and recording their oral histories.
• More academic research in all the many facets of the New Deal projects.
