Marylanders can’t wait until they’re in crisis to receive life-saving services. Our ask is simple and achievable: Mental health and substance use care available when and where Marylanders need it.

Maryland is ranked 7th worst in the nation for rates of opioid deaths from April 2020 through April 2021. Two-thirds of Maryland’s counties qualify as federally-designated mental health professional shortage areas. Commercial health insurance companies in Maryland reimburse behavioral health providers nearly 20% less than other doctors for similar procedures.

Marylanders can’t wait until they’re in crisis to receive life-saving services. Learn more at www.EqualTreatmentMD.org.

A campaign of the Maryland Behavioral Health Coalition.