History of The Buccaneer

*One of the most legendary points of interest in the Virgin Islands,
The Buccaneer is a completely modern hotel with a history as fascinating as that of St. Croix itself.*

*It was in 1653 that Charles Martel, a Knight of Malta, constructed the first building on the property where The Buccaneer is located.
This French Greathouse was placed out of sight of the sea to protect from roving foes.*

Later, after Denmark bought the island in 1733, Governor von Prock built his home on the estate, turning the French Greathouse into a sugar factory and erecting the sugarmill, which is as it was in the days when sugar was king.

*Over time, the estate would transition from sugar to cotton, to cattle.
In 1922 Douglas Armstrong purchased the ranch from the Heyliger family and continued to raise cattle. Finally in 1947, Rachel and Douglas Armstrong decided to restore the ruins of the Danish governor's Great House and to open an eleven guest room hotel and call it The Buccaneer.*

*It was the first hotel in St. Croix to be built and operated by an island family.
Guests, known as "continentals," made a two-day trip from the mainland to stay at The Buccaneer and often mixed their own drinks, helped rake the beach, painted furniture, and planned meals.
The 2nd generation owner, Robert D. Armstrong built the second floor of the main hotel, the 18-hole golf course, 8 tennis courts and much of what we see today.*

*Elizabeth Armstrong, the 3rd generation of The Armstrong family to own
The Buccaneer added Beauregard Restaurant and the Beach House to the resort.
Join Elizabeth for her weekly Sugar Mill sunset cocktail party,
as well as her weekly History and Nature Walk*
