Join us for an interactive session to explore Reimagining Technical Assistance.

Technical assistance (TA) is a primary mechanism for delivering health aid, yet current approaches often undermine and don’t sustainably strengthen the capacity of individuals, institutions and ultimately health systems. TA has been criticized for being externally imposed, poorly coordinated, disempowering, and not holistic. Stagnating progress on health outcomes amidst increasing investment and growing calls for decolonizing and reforming global health practice point to a need to reimagine our approach to TA.

This interactive session will introduce participants to the Reimagining TA critical shifts framework, as a new vision for global health TA, and foster dialogue around advancing this vision across implementers, funders, TA recipients, and other partners.

The session will include a gallery walk, during which participants will explore posters about each of the nine critical shifts, and a dynamic panel discussion featuring panelists from USAID, the Global Financing Facility (GFF), and JSI Ethiopia and the United States.

Light refreshments will be served.
